Invades Persia about 500 years before Christ the whole number of his army soldiers, slaves, women, and fighting men in army and fleet to have reached 5,000,000 - he having taken a station on an eminence in order to gratify his vanity by viewing the vast assemblage which he had collected - the earth covered with his troops, and the sea with his vessels - is said to have been suddenly so much affected as to shed tears, upon reflecting that, in the space of one hundred years not one of the eight many thousands would be alive.

1572 The 24th of August St. Bartholomew's Day the great massacre of the Huguenots or the French Protestants Charles (IX) 9th wrote but a few days before that to Louis of Nassau, that he was determined to sustain the Protestant cause both in France & the Netherlands; and, a few days before the massacre, to the commanders of the French troops to assist their Calvinist brethren in Flanders, ^{then} gave himself the signal for a general massacre, and shot from his palace winding his subjects as if they had been wild beasts.
Between Sunday & Tuesday, it was calculated 5,000 were murdered; the Butchery was extended throughout France and it is estimated by Sully at 70,000 lost; some state it at only about 25,000, the Historian De Thou says no such outrages and murder was to be found in all antiquity, or in the annals of the world. ^{Not long} his The heart of Protestant Europe stood still with horror. The Queen of England put on mourning, and spurned the apologies of the French Envoy with contempt. At Rome the Pope and his Cardinals, went to the church of St. Mark to render thanks; and the Te Deum was performed in presence of the august assemblages
