It was a king in Africa
He had an only son
And none of Europe's common kings
Could have a dearer one.

With you came arrows five feet long
And with a shining bar
When but a boy to the palm woods
Went that young hunter on.

And he had brought white ivory
And many spotted birds
When leopard furs and beautiful
Beneath his arrow died.

Around his arms around his brow
A shining bar was rolled
It was to mark his royal blood
He wore that bar of gold.

And often at his father's feet
The evening he would pass
When weary of the hunt he lay
Upon the scented grass.

Alas it was an evil day
When such a thing could be
When strangers pale and terrible
Came o'er the distant sea.

They found the young prince mid the woods
The palm woods deep and dark
That day his line hunt was done
They bore him to their bark.
