

The First Pursuits Sizes
By S. S. Brooks

(On his pillow of shame a peasant was lying, in turning, he saw the ring which he wore (of famine and want this poor peasant was dying, and then he saw his hands to his eyes were so sore)

(But there as he lay, there came over the room
A light ray of hope for true trials such lot
(He suffered, he lighted up with emotion
When the new like a sunshine illumined his lot)

(It came from above for over the pillow
She saw the taming the beautiful nest
(And now his hand from the earth shone pillow
He thus in a prayer his deep feelings expressed)

(I thank the Lord for the aid thou hast given
By the hand of the stranger and the sea
(I thank you, poor peasant, kind father in heaven
For this success which cometh directly from thee)

(I am with the Lord will be silently, praying
When the heart is full with a longer to pray
(And trusting, my soul to thy merciful keeping Stay in the grace from affliction to rest)

(Be late there for me hasten living, increased
But then when I hear of its treasures that there (my wife and my little ones they are befriended
And would from misery, from want and despair)

(Oh God with that hand to thy spirit shining
Which cheers us in sorrow and lightens our eyes (Be there still the power of high destiny guiding Preserve it from danger each ill with mine)
