

William says. how happy my poor old Father and Mother would be this evening and all my Sisters. too. could they know that Jacob and I are so near each other he says.
I am both proud and happy to own him as a Brother. for he is a wholehearted fellow. Charles Morgan has been on board to see us. and Hebron Cronell also. Charles has grown to be a great man. looks very much like his Mother. we shall have here tomorrow or next day. as William thinks it will not do to have the Ship in Port any longer but if we are all living. we shall meet here again. in a year from now I received a letter from Susan. by Jacob also. the Shoes which I suppose Sister Abby sent. they were just what I wanted. and I will pay her one of these days. little Maury is well. and is now asleep on my smuging Bedstead. she is the quietest range. you ever saw. up to all kinds of mischief. tell Sarah. I would like to have had her here to day. but I conclude by what Jacob tells me. that she is engaged in better business than coming round Cape Horn. I am going on board the Lithia in the morning with Wm if the weather is good. as I wish to see the place where Jacob has got to spend the next two or three years. Wm. Claghorn is well. and the Capt. thinks he is an extra smart young man. Lutz. must be sure. and. wait for him for. it will break his heart. if she don't. Mr. Foster has
