Concords and Discords

By W. LLEWELLYN WILSON

Baltimore's music colony, which is rapidly growing in size and importance because of the number of young well-trained musicians who are now within our borders—many of whom are making this city their permanent places of abode—received quite a shock and a feeling of an irreplaceable loss in the death of Lovey Wilson Husketh, music teacher.

Mrs. Husketh, for more than 50 years taught local musicians who are now holding important posts throughout America.

The music colony, too, mourns the death of Grant E. Biddle, retired educator, who in addition to serving as a principal in public schools here, contributed to Baltimore musical activities with the use of his rich bass voice in many of the enterprises which have been developed in our town here on the Patapsco River.

Gave Unstintingly of Talents

Since the days of their youth, both of these excellent musicians have lent unstintingly of the musical talents with which they were so bountifully endowed by nature.

Mrs. Husketh, years ago, was a time to time have sprung up here, moving figure in the establishment of the S. Coleridge Taylor Music Society which was housed in Pennkins Square Baptist Church. It firstly Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and was the first well organized music school to be set up here for colored people.

Mrs. Husketh was not only a composer, the late S. Coleridge Taylor when that English-born she was an organist and choir-musician produced his great cantata "Hiawatha" here in America

Mr. Biddle Choir Member

Mrs. Husketh continued her work in music up to the time of her death. She was an active member in the group of local musicians who are now gradually preparing to give "St. Paul" master of much skill. She gave the very best years of her life in musical service to Enon Baptist Church.

Mrs. Husketh was the possessor of a rich contralto voice and with her choral organizations, which from time to time, gave stirring performances of the choral group which she was long identified.

The deceased musician was a member of the choral group which was housed in Pennkins Square Baptist Church. It firstly Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and was the first well organized music school to be set up here for colored people.

The talented musician sang at one time under the great master gifted and competent pianist, but Taylor when that English-born she was an organist and choir-musician produced his great cantata "Hiawatha" here in America

Mr. Biddle Choir Member

Mr. Biddle was a member of the choir at Sharp Street Memorial Church and the Baltimore City Chorus.

Both of those sterling musicians will be sorely missed by the music lovers of Baltimore.
