New Lafayette Market sure

Board of Estimates assures residents

The Board of Estimates said Thursday afternoon the people in Northwest Baltimore are "unduly alarmed" and nothing has been said about taking the new Lafayette Market out of the city budget.

"It will stay in," said City Council President Arthur B. Price to about 25 persons who attended the board meeting in City Hall. Mr. Price told the group that funds earmarked for the new market had never been withdrawn from the budget.

Lee McCardell, city controller, told the troup they had been "alarmed by rumors" which, he claimed, had appeared in the daily newspapers.

"Nothing has ever been said about taking the Lafayette Market out of the budget. Everyone is unduly alarmed."

—o O o—

BEFORE THE board officially convened, Councilman Leon Abramson (D, 4th) asked the board to give the Lafayette Market people all the consideration possible.

He said he was making the statement at that time because he had to leave to make a previous engagement.

Following the remarks of Mr. Price and Mrs. McCardle, Nathan Hendler, representing the market stall owners in the area, thanked the board for "your kind consideration."

"We're glad to know that the Lafayette Market will not be taken out of the budget. Hendler stated.

Slain girl missed by sisters, brothers

Carolyn was stylish, playful fond of records, dancing

AFRO reporter Mitch Thomas did the following story after visiting the home of a 13-year-old student at General Vocational School No. 452. Police, last week, charged 18-year-old Henry G. Green of the 1100 block Saratoga St., with her death. No date has been set for the hearing).

The three sisters of Geraldine Carter, 13 - year - old murdered school girl, cimbed the stairs to their third-floor apartment at 1004 W. Lexington St., Tuesday.

At the head of the stairs, the oldest, Ruth, 15, reached up in the darkened hallway and turned on a ceiling light.

Inside the apartment, she reached up again and a bright light fell on a modestly furnished room. Then the three sat down on a cot near a dining table, flanked on either end by a chair.

The floor was covered with pieces of newspaper, giving evience of a recent scrubbing. Straight ahead in the small kitchen, a slow fire burned in a low, black cook stove.

—o O o—

The bedroom door was ajar, exposing a neatly made-up bed and a chair. An inside clothesline hung over the heads of the three girls. On one side of Ruth sat Carolyn, 12; on the other Nicholas, 9.

They talked of their sister, Geraldine, with Ruth commanding most of the conversation, Carolyn interrupting in an effort to be helpful and young Nicolas saying very little and pensively chewing on a wad of bubble gum as if she were lonely for the big sister who was not among them.

It had been three weeks since Geraldine's battered body had been found in an alley located in the rear of the 200 block N. Arlington Ave., but they still had not recovered from the shock of it.

"Geraldine," Ruth said, "was like any other girl of her age. She was very popular with everybody and had a lot of girl friends. She was popular with the boys too, because she was a nice looking girl."

—o O o—

WE MISS HER most around meal times," the sisters agreed. "Geraldine liked to eat a lot. She was always buying sodas and hot dogs. Probably more than anything else, she liked to dance. She could do the "Mash Potato" a teenage dance) very well.

"Parties, she was crazy about and she loved to sing. On the choir at Morning Star Baptist Church she sang soprano. Her voice was beautiful and clear."

While the sisters remembered some of the characteristics of the unfortunate Geraldine, a friend, Mrs. Elizabeth Grant of 1537 Leslie St., came into the apartment. She, too, had fond memories of Geraldine.

"I CAN REMEMBER," Mrs. Grant, mother of six said, "how Geraldine used to baby-sit for one of my children. She loved children.

"She was easy to get along with and was very frank in her speaking, never deceitful. Geraldine seldom bothered to gossip. Sometime when I would be chattering away about something she woul be sitting quietly, reaing a comic book."

Carolyn said her sister was always stylish in her dressing. She wore her hair in a poodle cut and generally had a neckerchief around her neck. She liked to wear pants most of the time.

—o O o—

IN FACT, one sister said she had pants on when she was found in that alley.

—o O o—

MRS. GRANT said she had once heard Geraldine speak of being a dietician. That was probably because she liked to eat food so much, one of the sisters said.

"One evening," Ruth said, "we were listening to some records. My brother, Bernard, said he missed Geraldine most then. She was fond of records.

"On the day they found her," the oldest sister continued, "she had talked about masquerading as a cowboy on Halloween. She and I had also planned to get red 'duster' (coats) just alike.

—o O o—

THEN THE sisters and the friend thought about the savage beating Geraldine had suffered —the beating that had caused her to die.

They could not understand what could have been the cause for it, unless Geraldine had made her assailant angry by kidding. She was very playful and always kidding. She was not the type to start fights, they agreed.

Another thing they thought was strange was the fact that Geraldine was alone at the time." She was never alone. Someone must have been with her, they said at least one of her girl friends. It is strange no was with her the night it happened."

—o O o—

THE GIRLS sat and waited for their mother, Mrs. Mildred Carter, to return home from work. It was already after six o'clock. Downstairs on the corner of the street, a group of teenagers hung around in a store where Geraldine used to go.

Sometime, when the juke box was playing and there were not many people in the store, Geraldine and other youths would have fun dancing.

At the moment, however, there were several people in the store and no one was bothering to dance. Geraldine Carter would never dance there again.
