REPORT FROM EUROPE

Baltimore M.D. moves to Paris

By OLLIE STEWART

PARIS — Baltimore has lost a resident to Paris for the next three years.

He is Dr. Nathan A. Pitts, 3310 Dorchester who for years has been commuting daily to Washington, D.C., to hold down a desk in the U.S. Department of Education.

Now, however, Dr. Pitts has moved over to the State Department and has been assigned to Paris where he will work with UNESCO.

The move doesn't surprise me, and maybe not Pitts, because he's been running over to Paris for years — often giving me a buzz two or three times a year to say: "Well, I'm back again."

He's been U. S. trouble-shooter on many occasions at UNESCO, and has usually been able to iron things out in a couple of weeks.

This time he didn't phone me, simply rang my bell and announced: "I'm here for three years — and my wife and daughter will come over the first of next year."

It was like old times, except that Pitts is already installed via swank apartment (Uncle Sam picks up the tab) and can say goodbye to Paris hotels and restaurants.

In other words, he can now live like a Parisian — instead of a tourist. And that makes a big difference.

Arriving at about the same time (Oct. 15) was a tourist I've long wanted to welcome to Paris. He is Dr. W. W. Stewart, Atlanta physician and my oldest nephew.

A Meharry graduate who interned at Harlem Hospital, Bill Stewart blew in from London where he attended a medical convention for most of a week. Another nephew, Lawrence Buford, came down from Holland to make it a family gathering. . . .

And because of the auto show, plus a conference at UNESCO, not a hotel room was available — so I had to play host. But in spite of bags all over the place, we managed to bring each other up to date.

A camera bug (with a Japanese Nikon cocked and ready), Bill lugged me around to parts of Paris I hadn't seen in years. Nothing like a visitor to make an old Paris hand get out and see the city.

But in spite of crowded hotels, I still insist that October is about the best month in which to see Paris.

People dress better, girls look prettier and the weather is more bracing than in July and August. What's more, a visitor in October sees a lot of French People. In summer, he merely bumps into tourists like himself.

But best of all, the shops are open. You can get clothes cleaned and pressed, you don't have to hunt for a bakery that's open, and the theaters have sparkling new productions.

Sudden thought: Now that the race thing for American GIs in Europe been investigated, does anybody imagine there will be any changes?

Will black soldiers get pro moted as quickly as white soldiers? Will the double standard be abolished?

Will off-base clubs frequented by whites continue to discourage blacks, even to the point of refusing them service?

The answer to all these questions is "no," which is why most colored organizations in the army in Germany boycotted the investigation. "The race thing," one soldier declared, "is not limited to the military. It's a built-in part of American life — and the military merely reflects what everybody knows already. So what's to investigate?"

Halloween pumpkin also fine for food

By VIRGINIA McLUCKIE,
*Food Economist

This is the big week for pumpkins as we celebrate Halloween which is the eve of all Saints Day. Aside from their service to youngsters to scare the daylights out of their elders, pumpkins offer many possibilities as food.

Pumpkins are native to the Americas. Fragments of stems, seeds and fruits of these cucurbits have been discovered in ruins of ancient cliff dwellings in Southwestern United States.

The history of present varieties of pumpkins has been traced back to Indian tribes where the record stops. Today pumpkins are grown throughout the United States and used mostly in and near the producing area. Maryland is one of the six principal producing states.

If you buy Small Sugar pumpkins for pie, look for pumpkin that is round, slightly ribbed, flattened at ends, about seven inches in diameter, weighing six to eight pounds. The skin is bright orange, and the meaty rich orange flesh is fine grained.

Field pumpkins weighing up to twenty pounds have a thick, dry, sweet orange-yellow flesr that is somewhat coarse. It can be used for pie if the pumpkin is not too large in size. The very large size field pumpkins are used mostly as feed for livestock or sold as home decorations or for Jack-O-Lanterns. The convenient form of pumpkin is that which has been canned.

It may be less expensive than the fresh pumpkin when you consider the work involved in cooking, then removing the flesh from the skin and mashing or selving the flesh. Besides pie, pumpkin may be used as a vegetable boiled or baked, in corn bread, for custards and in pumpkin cake. Pumpkin is one of the yellow fleshed vegetables, an excellent source of vitamin A.

Along with your Jack-O-Lantern, plan to serve foods that are seasonal and in heavy supply. Fresh cider or apple juice is excellent chilled and served with gingerbread, spiced cake or donuts. Canned applesauce is also in heavy supply. Freshly harvested apples are ideal for trick or treat giving or for family consumption any time of the day. Small Red Delicious or Jonathan varieties are suggested.

The best buy list for regular tablefare includes sales on pork and beef, chickens, milk and dairy products and Grade A eggs for protein. In vegetables look for buys in cabbage, white and sweet potatoes, cauliflower, yellow onions, carrots, turnips and cooking greens. At the fruit counters grapefruit, tangelos and tangerines are available in the season for pomegranates.

Receipe for this week is for cider raisin sauce. This sauce is made with ¼ cup brown sugar (packed), 1½ tablespoons cornstarch, 1/8 teasp. salt, 1 cup fresh cider, ¼ cup chopped raisins, 8 cloves, whole, 1 two inch stick cinnamon, and 1 tablespoon butter.

Combine all ingredients except butter. Stir and cook together for 10 mins. Remove spices. Add butter. Serve hot on hot or cold ham slices or sandwiches.

Grants
CELEBRATING FOR YOU TODAY
IF YOU WANT A MANAGEMENT CAREER, GET TOGETHER WITH GRANTS
Are you skeptical about 'Equal Opportunity Employers'? Equal rights are nothing new at Grants. You're welcome here, regardless of race, color, creed or sex.
Most important — we have proven that we give equal opportunity for advancement to everyone (we're color-blind). All it takes is hard work, determination to succeed, and the ability to manage people. We'll do the rest in training you to fill management positions of substantial responsibility and high level income. And you will have the same chance as anyone else to be promoted to executive field and home office positions.
Our management people are expected to accept periodic relocation as part of their growth and experience. This is a demanding business, but the rewards can be outstanding. If you think you can 'make it' with Grants in our Store Management Program, or in our Credit or Restaurant Management Training Programs, contact us now for further information—it may be the smartest move you ever made!
