3 blacks among new MTA supers

The Metropolitan Transit Authority announced recently the promotion of six bus operators, three of whom are black, to the position of transportation supervisors.

Those promoted include, Robert R. Dickerson, Carlye C. Gundy, Charles A. Harmon, D. C. Keys, Raymond J. Mazzochi, and Henry Muir.

According to Joseph V. Garvey, resident manager of the MTA, the addition of more supervisors is part of a total effort by the MTA to improve bus service in the metropolitan area.

Transportation supervisors are responsible for the day to day operation of individual bus lines and are called upon to maintain schedules, to make adjustments in routes, to meet immediate problems occurring on a line, and to deal with unusual circumstances which may evolve.

BLACK MAN TALKING

Yes, I changed the face of the earth. That is my business printing the Black people Beautiful in one or more colors. Today the world is supported from the word color, from birth, principle to fashion, and the pen. Bailey's painting of Black people and the word color have changed people, things and the public. The trade has scouted the globe for colored fabrics, etc., but the worst thing is stealing from a black man.

Bailey created a deck of cards for every nation on earth. They will not give me a second copyright for my playing cards. Education is kindness. They have stolen all my commercial art work finished drawings, and fine sketches. Fire inspectors made junk of three libraries of my clippings. Everybody who prints the Black people in one or more colors owes me some money. That is my business idea, and they got the colors from my paintings at the art academy. Send me some money please.
Send me one dollar for a deck of playing cards I designed for everybody.

I have a painting of Black Jesus Christ, six foot by eight. I painted it on linen. If you want to see it, it will cost you 50¢. On exhibit every Tuesday and Sunday 2 to 4 p.m.
