summer project involved a week-long workshop at Fellowship House this week.

The group heard such speakers as Dr. G. James Flemming, director of the Institute for Political Education, Morgan State College; Walter Black, executive secretary of the Maryland State Branch of the NAACP; Douglass Sands, executive secretary of the Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations; and Oliver Singleton, regional director of the AFL of -CIO.

In addition to a discussion of the social problems peculiar to the Eastern Shore of Maryland, the talks evolved around such topics as "What a Labor Union can Mean for Colored People," "How to Influence Politicians," "Establishing Community Relationships" and "Alternatives to Political Influence."

Much of the discussion centered around the economic problems of the area.

"One of the basics of the program is that economic progress must precede or at least accompany political responsibility and awareness," Henry maintained.

THE STUDENTS involved were selected for a variety of reasons, which ranged fro interest, experience in civil rights movements, to familiarity with the Eastern Shore communities, Henry revealed.

Several of them have had related experience abroad in connection with student exchange programs.

They are Thomas Kennedy, of Boston, Mass., a sophomore at Swarthmore College, and a participant in the winter's Eastern Shore demonstrations, William Henry, Maryland State College, Princess Anne sophomore, and a member of CIG; Leo Burroughs, Morgan Sophomore, public relations director of CIG; Maurice Holmes, CIG Planning Committee Chairman; Steve Wolfe, Yale Junior and a participant in the Northern Student Movement demonstrations; T. E. Curtis, Villanova Law School, and longtime CIG member, and Betsy Dinsmore, a sophomore at Connecticut College for Women.

Also an advisory Board consisting of from 12 to 15 persons of Baltimore and the rural areas assisted in the planning of the project.

HENRY, in spite of his youth, has a varied background in organization and administration.

As a student at Morgan, he served as regional director and assistant state chairman of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations, and was once sent as a delegate to Land, Sweden to the International Student Movement.

He was chosen by the International Student Movement to represent the group in the area of programming at the World Federation of the United Nations Association in Warsaw, Poland in September of 1960.

HE AND his co-workers readily admit the idealism implicit in their project, and goals will be much greater than the immediate ones.

"If we can get one child to transfer to an integrated school, or one company to declare a policy of fair employment, or one person to register and vote, we will have accomplished something, Henry maintained.

"And in the long run, the seeds we hope to plant this summer should bear fruit for a long time to come," he added.

He sees as perhaps the biggest obstacle to the success of the project as lack of financial support.

An estimated $5,500 budget will be needed to carry out the project as it has been planned.

"We'll get the money from somewhere. The important thing is to get started while the time is ripe—the colored people of Maryland will support us when they see the program working," he said optimistically.

commission were:

"For the most part, major employers seem to be following the letter of the law, if not actually the spirit.

"More jobs could have been secured by colored workers if a greater number had been able to meet the entry requirements."

Colored workers, "still seem reluctant to forge out into new areas where acceptance or non-harrassment is not assured."

Some of the most qualified employees will not venture into "countries unknown," a larger number with only "mediocre qualifications seem to be more aggressive in attempting to break down barriers."

THE AGENCY said its enlarged staff will devote more time to developing a community education program whose minority group youths will be aided in seeking employment in areas heretofore closed to them.

The commission, which also administers the city's new equal public accommodations ordinance, announced Wednesday that five restaurants are ignoring the anti-segregation law.

David L. Glenn, commission executive secretary, said his agency has received 10 complaints — two formal and eight informal — charging discrimination in the eating places.

The agency is prevented by law from identifying the offending establishments, until the cases are brought to public hearing.

Dr. Raymond V. Rangle is chairman of the commission which also includes:

Francis S. Ellbey, John P. Hainwald, Mrs. Emil H. Henning Jr., Manuel E. Lefko, James J. McDonnell, Leon Sachs, and Robert B. Watts.

Mrs. Harris was killed between 2:30 a.m. Sunday and 11:30 p.m. Monday.

Homicide investigators also reported that Mrs. Harris was not known at the Saratoga St. address.

An aunt, Mrs. Gertrude Rogers, 1300 block Argyle Ave., told the AFRO Thursday that she last saw her niece alive around 12:30 p.m. Sunday when she left her home in company with "a very calm, cool, cultured, and well dressed man," whom she had seen for the first time.

"I thought he was too nice," Mrs. Rogers recalled, "but I didn't pay him any attention because my niece T. gave him such a nice introduction."

The aunt said the victim lived "somewhere on Pine St., but I don't know where. You see, I don't visit that part of town."

MRS. HARRIS is legally separated from her husband, Harold Harris, who was given custody of their seven children in Norfolk, Va., Mrs. Rogers said.

Funeral arrangements are pending the arrival of Mr. Harris and other relatives from the Virginia town, she added.

The dead woman has been in Baltimore for nine years the aunt said, and has lived with various relatives, including a sister, Mrs. Edna Blow, 2200 block Park Ave., who identified hen body Monday night.

Mrs. Rogers said she walked to the corner with her sister and the stranger man when they left her home, but paid no particular attention to him and was not able to give police a description of him.

"And that's strange too," she said sorrowfully Thursday, "because I always take a good look at strange people so I can know them the next time I see them."

A PRIME suspect in the slaying, said Capt. Wade H. Poole, commander of the Northern District, was a former boyfriend of the victim.

But he had an ironclad alibi.

He was locked up and being finger printed at the time it happened," the captain added.

LT. ANTON GLOVER, heading the homicide squad assigned to the mysterious slaying said police have no solid clues, but are sifting bits of evidance which may lead to the killer.

check of the latest discovery, he said.

"This came from one section of the docks alone, but we expect to find more as we go along," Mr. Riley pointed out.

Last week veteran longshoremen told the AFRO that the theft ring is well organized and lost merchandise amounts to far more than the estimated million dollars.

The racket has been in operation for many years and involves many people, including supervisors and guards, agents and longshore men agree.
