Square, New York, but had to return to Baltimore before it ended.

They plan to attend the retrial, he told the AFRO.

The arrest of Yeoman Drummond by a squad of FBI agents outside of a diner in Larchmont, N.Y., last fall shocked his parents, who were baffled and bewildered in their search for a reason for his alleged activity.

FBI AGENTS charged that Yeoman Drummond had sold Russian UN embassy attaches secret documents, lifted from the files of the Navy Department. At the time of his arrest he was in the process of passing defense electronic secrets to the Reds, agents said.

Upon learning from newspapermen of his son's trouble, Mr. Drummond said sadly:

"One day you are talking to people, bragging about your son because you are proud that he is doing good.

"The next day you are ashamed to go out of your door!"

The sailor's alleged rendezvous with the Russians also caught his wife, Mrs. Lucille Drummond off guard, she told reporters, while sitting through the eight-day hearing.

A pleasant-faced, short, plumpish former nurse's aide, Mrs. Drummond told reporters she knew nothing of her husband's alleged espionage activities.

"It was news to me," she said this week while recalling events following Yeoman Drummond's arrest.

MRS. DRUMMOND said her husband always had money, but she never questioned the source from whence it came.

She remembered him obtaining $6,000, but never questioned him, she stated.

"When he got that $6,000 or whatever it was," she declared, "it never occurred to me to ask where it came from. As far as I know, he got it from his family. Nelson always had money."

Government prosecutors contended that Seaman Drummond got the $6,000 from Evgeni M. Prokhorov, and Ivan Y. Vyrodov, who used their diplomatic immunity to conduct an espionage mission in this country while attached to the UN.

Mrs. Drummond, who met and married the native Baltimorean two years ago, said they both worked hard trying to "put money together."

THE 24-YEAR-OLD WIFE, who was silent, but interested throughout the duration of the trial, told reporters they bought the Havana Bar and Grill in Newport, R.I. near the naval base where her sailor-husband was stationed.

She said they had planned to book entertainment into the night club and she thought the veteran seaman was out of town rounding up talent when he was nabbed by the G-Men while in company with the Reds.

Mrs. Drummond said she had no knowledge of her husband's arrest on Sept. 28 until a reporter called her 1:30 a.m.

For the duration of the trial, Mrs. Drummond said she had closed the bar and will not decide what action she will take until the case has been disposed of.

On one point, however, she was more certain. Asked if she still loves her husband, an infectious smile broke across her pleasant face and Mrs. Drummond answered softly, but firmly:

"Yes, of course!"

She didn't say it. She didn't have to. But like her in-laws in Baltimore, Mrs. Drummond, too, will be waiting, hoping . . . and praying.

WASHINGTON

Rev. Ed Hailes forum speaker

Rev. Edward Hailes, executive secretary, Washington Branch NAACP, addressed the Civic National Forum at the Twelfth Street YMCA, on Tuesday.

Rev. Hailes spoke on "Fellowship and Cooperation." He said, "inherent race superiority is a myth and should be buried and forgotten by all intelligent thinkers. The U. S. A. cannot long endure as a nation, if it is like "a house divided against itself.":

He continued, "the highest and richest blessings will come to the human family, if there is world - wide fellowship, love, cooperation, and brotherhood."

dence that Drummond had been handing over classified documents to the Russians since 1957, and had collected some $10,000.

According to the prosecute chief Assistant United States Attorney Vincent L. Broderick, the sailor came under suspicion when the Navy learned that he owned two cars and had bought a bar and grill in Newport, R. I., although his salary was only $318.10 a month.

The trap on Drummond was sprung last Sept. 28, when FBI agents closed in on him and two Russians at a diner outside New York City.

Agents said they found light Navy classified documents in the car and a gun.

WHEN DRUMMOND took the stand on Tuesday it was with an astounding story that was in sharp contrast to previous statements he had given.

Drummond admitted that his contacts with the Russians began when he was stationed in London, and a Soviet colonel offered him $700 to help him out of a financial difficulty.

The sailor said the Russian plied him with drinks and that he signed a receipt for the money, and this was the weapon the Russians held over his head.

He also said that all of the documents he gave the Russians were known by him to be unclassified, no matter how they had been marked.

DRUMMOND SAID that the colonel and three Soviet diplomats had threatened him with exposure unless he produced classified documents, and that the last meeting in September was to have been his last chance to either produce such material or give the name of someone who would, or face exposure.

With this threat hanging over his head, Drummond said he went to the rendezvous with the idea of killing one of the Russians, but the FBI moved in on them before the plan could succede.

The petty officer said that he had tried to get out of the grasp of the Soviets by asking for large sums of money, and that late in 1961 he was surprised when he asked for $6,000 and the Russians gave it to him.

During cross examination, Drummond admitted that through his activities "I might have" caused damage to the United States.

He said he had been "black mailed into committing offenses I would not normally have committed".

When the case finally went to the jury on Wednesday, the jury was instructed by Judge Weinfeld to return separate verdicts on two counts of the indictment.

1. Conspiracy with four Soviet diplomats since 1957 to transmit United State defense documents to the Soviet Union "with intent and reason to believe they were to be used to the injury of the United States and to the advantage of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics"

2. An actual attempt to transmit Navy documents in evidence in the trial to two Russians on the night of last Sept. 28.

The judge's charge took 70 minutes.

PRIOR TO this, the defense attorney, William C. Chance Jr., in his summation referred to his client as "at most a bit stupid" who "frolicked with the devil" as an "unwilling actor" rather than a partner of the USSR.

He also recalled Drummond's claim that he meant to kill one of the Russians at the meeting, and said that the FBI knew of the plan and had stationed agents around the rendezvous point, to make certain the Russians was not killed in America.

Taking a different view, prosecutor Broderick said that Drummond was not stupid but was an "articulate, intelligent sailor with 13 year experience" and clearance to handle top secret documents.

"Why was Drummond a traitor? Money, money, money he declared.

Referring to Drummond's previous good record with the Navy, Broderick said:

"Benedict Arnold was thought of very highly by General Washington at the time he passed information to Major Andre."

(This remark had to do with a famous betrayal of American secrets in the Revolutionary War.)

THE CASE went to the jury at 1:40 p.m. Wednesday and at 1:30 a.m. Thursday members returned to the court room to tell the judge they could not agree.

They were locked up for the night. Thursday morning the deliberations were resumed, with time out for lunch.

The jury reported back at 2:45 p.m. and later that afternoon announced they could reach no decision.

There was no demonstration in the crowded court-room when the jury was dismissed by the judge.

Introducing Soft Whiskey.

(The first hard liquor that's not "hard.")

Calvert Extra is as whiskey a whiskey as any whiskey you can buy. It does anything "hard" liquor can do. But does it softer.

Soft Whiskey swallows easy—with warmth, not heat. It has a pleasant taste, without woodiness or char. You might say that getting it down is half the fun.

Until recently, Soft Whiskey had always been a distiller's pipe dream. Attempts had been made. But they never quite worked.

At our distillery down in Baltimore, we tried for twelve years to produce a Soft Whiskey. About 22,000 experiments. Only one successful.

To protect our work, there are things about Soft Whiskey we can't tell. One thing we can tell you: in order to eliminate a cause of harshness, we do some distilling in small batches instead of giant ones. Before you sample Calvert Extra, the Soft Whiskey, there's something you ought to know: you may never touch "hard" liquor again.

The patrolman also showed to the court a torn shirt which he accused Skeens of tearing during the scuffle.

Skeens, maintained that the officer struck him with his night stick on the knee and pushed him around.

'Help me, I'll help you,' 'sick' man pleas to judge

A 62-year-old man who described himself as "sick," in Criminal Court Tuesday, and who has a habit of wearing dresses, presented Judge Charles D. Harris with a knotty problem.

George Gray, 2500 block Druid Hill Ave., was convicted of soliciting a vice squad policeman for immoral purposes last November. He made an indecent proposal to a policeman while wearing a dress, Robert V. Lassaro, prosecuter, said.

Before disposing of the case Judge Harris heard a moving plea from Mr. Gray:

"Your honor, give me probation, suspended sentence or anything, but don't send me back (to jail).

"I dress like a woman when I feel like it," Gray said, adding: "I'm sick."

"I'm trying to better myself. Help me and I'll help you," he told Judge Harris.

GRAY'S record shows he has been in and out of jail since 1929, serving prison terms in five states.

Judge Harris, in taking the case under advisement, said:

"A prison sentence won't help you and might hurt other people. Prison has not helped you in all these years and there's no reason to believe that it will now."

Although the state has no institution to treat cases such as Mr. Gray's, Judge Harris said, he can hardly overlook his extensive criminal record, including several convictions for soliciting.

On a plea of Fred E. Weisgal, however, Judge Harris released Gray in the custody of a relative until the probation department could investigate his case, and submit recommendations.

Victim wounded in tavern

A 32 - year - old man was found by Western District police lying face down in the rear of a tavern in the 400 block N. Brice St., with a gun shot wound in his thigh.

According to the wounded man, Charles Thompkins, 1900 block Edmondson Ave., he was shot during an argument with a man.

Mrs. Thompkins was taken to Lutheran Hospital where he was treated for the gun shot wound and released.

Of all the Englishmen who drink gin... how many drink Gordon's?

Most of them. And it's been that way for years. To be blunt about it, Gordon's is England's biggest selling gin—as it is America's and the world's. Why? Probably because we have always refused to tamper with a good thing. Gordon's still harks back to Alexander Gordon's original formula — conceived in London 194 years ago — so its distinctive dryness and delicate flavour remain unchanged and unchallenged to this day. Ask for Gordon's by name.
