blown all out of proportions. However, we didn't retract his statement because it was not justifiable to correct it. He said what he felt."

What Mr. Cambbell felt was feet by many others for the colored people of Cambridge's Second Ward were ready to march against the Guardsmen.

The march would not have been an ordinary march because the protestors would have been defying "militia law", as it is called.

TUESDAY WAS bright and clear.

The day began with a pensive tenseness hugging the cannery town like an invisible shroud.

Everything seemed normal. Early in the morning colored people breakfasted and went to work for, or with, the white man.

The bill colector, the milk and bread delivery man, the insurance man, mostly white, smiling, went about their chores of collecting money from the colored6, 25 per cent of whom are unemployed.

Yet, there was a kind of marionette-stiffness in the townspeople as if they all were waiting, yet not bothering, to think of an impending doom.

Race Street, the main business area, the street which symbolically and literally divides the community into white and black, the street where colored people were once forbidden to shop, the street which has borne the brunt of the demonstrations, was nearly deserted.

Shop clerks talked to one another for shoppers were hard to find.

Two leaders of the demonstrations, Stanley Branch, and Philip Savage, 30, tri-state secretary of the NAACP, noted that a change had pervaded Cambridge since the first freedom rides in 1961.

"The people here have more respect for you, as a person," said Mr. Branch, commenting on a peculiar by-product of the demonstration.

Describing how he and Mr. Savage bought a newspaper at a local stand, Mr. Branch said that the proprietor would "look through" colored people. Now he's changed.

When he brushed against me he actually apologized to me and acted as if he wanted my business, as if he respected me as a person."

BUT THE friendliness, if any, was superficial, of slight consequence, for Cambridge was rapidly maying, in a few hours, to its own Armaggedon between fully armed soldiers and unarmed civilians.

Meanwhile, telephones were buzzing and behind the scenes manipulators were frantically trying to head off the demonstration, because most observers felt that blood would flow in the streets."

Mrs. Gloria Richardson, 41, chairman of the Cambridge Nonviolent Action Committee (CNAC), which is spearheading the drive to desegregate the town, was jolted awake by an early morning telephone call from Burke Marshall, assistant district attorney assigned to the civil rights section of the U.S. Justice Department.

The gist of the conversation concerned the impending demonstrations which were scheduled for 8 p.m. that day.

Mr. Marshall was scheduling an appointment for the demonstrators and the Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

Mr Marshall called a second time, shortly after the initial phone call, informing Mrs. Richardson that the appointment was set for 3 p.m.

Leaving Fred Jackson, an executive member of CNAC, and Mr. Branch in charge, Mrs. Richardson, Mr. Savage, Mrs. Betty Jews, another executive staffer of CNAC, and Mr. Robinson hopped into Mr. Savage's car and motored to Washington, to meet with Mr. Kennedy.

MACEO HUBBARD greeted the contingent when it arrived at the Justice Department.

Mr. Kennedy greeted the leaders with a seriousness and gravity usually associated with him.

"We are going to be reasonable and sensible on both sides," he was reported to have said.

Around 4 p.m., Mr. Branch was sitting in the kitchen of one of the demonstrator's home when the wall telephone rang. It was a call from the Guardsmen's chaplain.

After a short conversation, Brig. Gen. George Gelston spoke to Mr. Branch about the demonstration which now was four short hours away.

IN MR. BRANCH'S words, they had a "mutual understanding."

The General had a duty to stop the demonstration.

Mr. Branch was going to lead one.

"Don't get me wrong," said Mr. Branch. "I have the greatest respect for Gen. Gelston, but he has a job to do and I was going to lead the demonstrators that night.

"I would have been the first in line.

"We had planned to march out of the church, two or three abreast up Pine St."

Meanwhile, the National Guard was busy. Some 300 National Guardsmen were either stationed in the city or bivouaced in the immediate vicinity. Gov. Tawes had sent in 400 to join those already there.

Cambridge was sealed off.

MR. BRANCH said that at least one tank was seen in position.

At the end of Pine St., the border between the white and colored sections of town, 100 yards away from the demonstrators assembly point was a jeep, said Mr. Branch a machine gun mounted on it.

The demonstration promised to be a fearsome spectacle.

IN DEFIANCE of militia law unarmed demonstrators would have walked into the face of the State's militia which had been augmented by 250 state police.

In Washington the four leaders decided with Mr. Kennedy's approval to call off the demostration.

Mr. Savage strode to a telephone and called Mr. Branch in Cambridge.

"The demonstration is off! The time: 5:30 p.m. two and a half hours from marching time."

Not needing an explanation, Mr. Branch grabbed a portable megaphone and rode up and down the Second Ward until 7 p.m. telling the citizens that the protest march was off — and so was the mass rally.

We did not want to hold a mass rally," said Mr. Said Branch, "because the people were really keyed up and we remembering that nearly fateful Sunday night) could not have held the crowd back from marching against the National Guard."

"YOU KNOW," he said, as I went through telling people that the demonstration was off, I got an 'OK' or a nod of the hand or 'I got it' and you know they really got it and it makes you feel good inside to know that what you want to command a cate has gotten across."

The 20 hours during which the demonstrators threatened to march was a message, a communication, which had to be gotten across.

hire color, we hire people.

In every case, with the exception of one person, the answer to problems on the job was, "We don't talk about it."

THE LONE exception was a man who did not wish to disclose his name. He said that his white bosses at the Trapp Frozen Food plant "sometimes get a little emotional about the demonstrations."

The speaker said, though, there had been no firings or intimidations because of the racial unrest in the city.

THE SERENITY of the job situation during the crisis in Cambridge is mis-leading because one of the central issues is employment.

Demonstrations, soldiers, violence often obscure this simple fact.

According to the Cambridge Nonviolent Action Committee at least 30 percent of the colored labor force is unemployed.

Another large percentage is seasonally employed. Others are earning marginal wages.

Recently a large garment industry employing 700 persons, two - thirds of which were colored, went out of business in Cambridge.

The crabs and oysters for which Cambridge is famed, are scarce this year.

PAUL VEACH, part - owner of a crab and oyster business which employes some 100 persons of both races, said that business is slow this year.

Mr. Veach, who said that the demonstrations did not alter the "good relationships" among his employees, said that he tries to keep all of his personnel employed.

He does this through reducing the hours of all of his employees.

In the middle of the day Thursday, a random survey of the men walking on Pine St. revealed that most were unemployed and had little hopes of gaining work.

"What I need are some jobs," said one of the men lounging in front of a luncheonette, "but," he said, "there isn't anything in this town."

Much of the bitterness in the town of colored people toward the whites is the lack of employment opportunities and the inability to gain steady employment.

NOT ONE PERSON interviewed had confidence in the branch office of the state employment agency.

The agency reports it keeps no records of the unemployed by race.

It cannot give an accurate figure of the number of workers in Dorchester County, which it covers.

In short, without certain statistical information, it is impossible to determine the economic condition of people living in Dorchester County, of which Cambridge is the county seat.

Federal Government states that any area which has more than six percent of its labor force unemployed could be designated as a "disaster area" and become eligible to receive relief funds and foods.

If what CNAC says is accurate, the colored population is in dire need of relief.

Some of the above interviewed employees were hired as a direct result of special

THE SLAIN NAACP leader's wife and three children held reservation at the Mayflower Hotel. Mrs. Evers made a vow following her husband's murder that she would devote her life to fulfilling the dream for which he had lived.

Meanwhile, at least two funds have been established in the memory of the victim.

The Evers Scholarship Fund, a trust arrangement handled by the NAACP, was set up to provide for the education of his three children, aged 3.8, and 9.

INITIAL contributors to the scholarship fund were the United Auto Workers, AFL-CIO and B'nai B'rith, $1,000 each, and the National Council of Churches, $2,000.

Another $2,000 was contributed by more than a thousand persons who attended a memorial service at John Wesley AMEZ Church.

Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive director, was the principal audience in Alexandria, Va., that the Medgar Evers Freedom Fund would be established to underwrite costs of the civil rights drive in the South.

Southern Christian Leadership Conference, told this newspaper:

"We shouldn't commit ourselves to stop demonstrations. The President is acting in good faith, but we can't commit ourselves to stop because of the attitude of Dixiecrats and reactionary Republicans.

"We may take a brief wait - and - see period, but if we see civil rights legislation bogging down, we will have to move.

"I think Congress has been holding a sit-in demonstration for generations on civil rights. We would be derelict in our duty if we sit idly by while they resort to the same old sit-in game of filibuster.

"If they need a protest demonstration to move them, the colored citizens of this country and their frieinds ought to give them the biggest demonstration they have ever seen.

"The American people will have to move Congress if brakes are put on civil rights legislation."

JULIUS W. HOBSON, Eastern regional representative of the Congress of Racial Equality, said:

"I don't think we ought to halt demonstrations on the basis of something that happens over and over again like the filibuster.

"I'm not political and by that, I'm not speaking for or against any particular party.

"I think colored communities across the country would be unwise to stop protest demonstrations at this point and lose the momentum and interest built up in their communities.

"Our actions really shouldn't depend on what Congress will or will not do. There will be need for action even if we get more legislation.

"The problem is and will be one of enforcement. We already have good laws on the books, but they aren't enforced.

"Congress has a duty in the civil rights area, but the initiative to correct these wrongs should remain with the colored citizens of this country."

THE REV. William F. Bishop, president of the Methodist Ministers Union, said:

"No, I don't think demonstrations should be halted. If people stop acting, there is the possibility that Congress will feel that there is no need to do anything about the problem.

"Congressmen should be pressed to act. We shouldn't sit idly by and wait. We have waited long enough."

The Rev. Edward A. Hailes, executive secretary of the D.C. NAACP, said, "I don't think we can let up at this point. The President is making an honest and sincere effort to solve this problem.

"But we must continue to dramatize the necessity to pass this legislation."

THE PRESIDENT's proposals would:

"Guarantee all citizens equal access to the services and facilities of hotels, restaurants, places of amusement and retail establishments."

Legislation would empower the Attorney General to file suits in Federal courts on behalf of students in school desegregation.

It would seek to alleviate unemployment among non - whites by broadening the Federal Manpower Development and Training Act and by expanding the peddling Youth Employment Bill.

Permanent status would be given the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities.

With these and other proposals, Mr. Kennedy, asked for the elimination of employment discrimination through "pending Federal fair employment practices legislation, applicable to both employers and unions."

Can you name the 6 reasons Martini devotees prefer the glorious Gordon's Martini?

1 To this day, the ancient pot still method is used in distilling Gordon's Gin. 2 Only gin from the heart of the run is bottled for Gordon's. 3 Gordon's uses only juniper berries and other choice botanicals aged to the peak of maturity. 4 Gordon's is extraordinarily dry. 5 Gordon's has a distinctively delicate flavour. 6 Gordon's maintains its exceptional quality because it still harks back to Alexander Gordon's original formula created in England in 1769. Reasons enough for enjoying a Glorious Gordon's Martini soon, wouldn't you say?

Sit-in case to be heard on schedule

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The Supreme Court on Monday denied a request from principals in the Glen Echo (Md.) Amusement Park sit-in case to shift the scheduled fall hearing from the summary to the regular calendar.

A court spokesman said summary cases are allotted one hour, while general calendar cases are allowed two hours of argument each.

The Glen Echo case grew out of the arrest in June, 1960, of five students for trespassing by a "special policeman" at the now desegregated Glen Echo Amusement Park.

Homes program at School 131

The intermediate opportunity class of School No. 131 had a program on homes recently. There were original stories, poems and slides presented to explain how a house is built.

The children built houses from card board boxes. Drawings, book reports and examples of work clothes were shown.

Participating in the program were Samuel Braxton, Jerome Douglas, James Frederick, Joseph Howard, Stephen Jackson, Anthony Jones, Edgar Locks, Allen Murray, Vernon Soden, David Turner, Albert Ward, Robert Wilson, Sidney Richardson and Virgil Wise.

Others in the program were: Aloysious Carter, Robert Lewis, Benjamine Garland, William Mickey, Tyrone Johnson, Olden Nichols and Jeremiah Wright. Darryl Moore was master of ceremonies.

GUESTS were:

Mrs. Ruth Hirschmann from the Baltimore Urban Renewal and Housing Agency; Mrs. Mabel Walters and a class from School 122; Mrs. Sylvia Lyons and Mr. Mason Hawkins and their classes from School 110. A number of parents were also present.

John M. Woods is principal of School 131. Ethel C. Covington is the teacher in charge. Margaret Gassway is the teacher of the class which presented the program.

73 teachers are enrolled for Morgan science, math institute

Forty-four Maryland secondary teachers are among the 73 selected to attend the Seventh Summer Institute for High School Teachers of Science and Mathematics opening Monday (June 24) at Morgan State College.

The six-week session, offering courses in biology, chemistry, mathematics and physics, is being sponsored under a $65,200 grant from the National Science Foundation.

Each participant is awarded a stipend of $75 a week and additional allowances for dependents, up to a maximum of four, plus travel to attend the program.

Dr. Thomas P. Fraser, professor of science education at the college and director of the institute, disclosed that the teachers were selected from among 695 applicants.

TWENTY-SEVEN of the 44 Maryland secondary teachers are employed at Baltimore City Schools. Other teachers are from high schools in Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands and Germany.

Support of the institute is part of the National Science Foundation's program of revitalizing science instruction in the secondary schools and of developing the nation's scientific potential.

The Morgan institute this year is organized around a comprehensive course entitled "Science and Mathematics for High School Teachers."

Other courses to be offered the teachers are: "General Astronomy," "The Yellow Version of the American Institute of Biological Sciences Biology Course," "Basic Chemistry, "Fundamental Concepts of Mathematics," "Introduction to Probability and Mathematical Theory Of Statistics," "Basic Concepts of Physics" and "Seminar in Modern Aspects of Teaching High School Science and Mathematics."

The session will end August 2.
