'Sound of Music' for children of all ages

By LOUISE DAVIS STONE

'One thing good can be said about "The Sound of Music" - Mary Martin is not in it.

The Trapp family that slipped out of Austria in 1938 and arrived upon U.S. shores to become famous for their singing was inspiration for the syrupy plot.

• • •

"THE SOUND of Music" is cream whipped of togetherness and tears of joy and sadness.

It is sweet! Not, really it is!

The story holds the usual bits of romantic fantasy; the songs are infectious and clinging; and there is no dancing. This musical does not represent Rodgers and Hammerstein's finer moments. Nevertheless, it merrily rolls along, providing a full evening's entertainment.

• • •

MARIA, THE petulant postulant, is asked to leave the nunnery because she is a free spirit. She takes a post as governess for seven children whose father is the menacing Baron von Trapp, widower and retired naval captain. At least in the first act he is a terror. Things get better later.

• • •

BARON VON TRAPP finds virtue only in discipline and pages his children by means of a boatswain pipe. Maria is convinced that singing is the answer to most problems, wins over the seven juvenile hearts and whistles while she works. Maria begins by teaching them this "Do Re Mi" tune which puts each child on stage and takes each off - sort of like "The King and I". Naturally, this is just darling.

Maria "gets thee back to the nunnery" when Baron von Trapp shows his ongoing hots for her. The grim, but gentle, understanding abbess stands firm and refuses to let Maria use the nunnery for an escape. So back she goes into the lion's den. The once tyrannical Baron is now loving and affectionate. His glamourous rich girl friend on a visit to the Baron's estate observes, accepts and slinks away.

• • •

THE THIRD Reich breathes down on Austria, but the Baron is determined to defy them. His friends desert him, of course. The rest of the story deals with the family's exit from the Nazi regime.

The religious emphasis is about what one would expect from gaudy Broadway. Oliver Smith's scenery is elaborate, the costumes are pretty and plentiful for those who need aid in their fantasies.

• • •

BARBARA MEISTER is just grand for the role of Maria Reiner - she is young, pretty, energetic, of good voice and never dull. How the aging Mary Martin ever pulled this off escapes me. Shifting emotions seems to make the part of Captain Von Trapp a little difficult.

• • •

JOHN MYHERS appears to be embarrassed about the whole thing. He was stiff without being stern and carried a bewildered look throughout.

Katherine Hilgenberg's the Mother Abbess was both successful and pleasing. The "littlest angel" and youngest child of the Baron's family, Greti (Dawn Meyers) was the most charming of the seven.

The only realistic human being in the show was Max Detweiler, a parasitic concert promoter who is at the same time lovable and obnoxious. Jack Collins has this part which he turns into a real comic character. At times it is a bit overdone. He and the Baron's playmate from Vienna, Elsa Schraeder have a shrugging good time.

Inspite of itself, "the Sound of Music" will have you leaving the theatre with a song on your lips - "My Favorite Things" "Climb Every Mountain" or the title song. It is a musical for children of all ages.

Expect it to run through August 3rd at the National Theatre.

ANNAPOLIS DOINGS

By ELOISE RICHARDSON

"The richness and depth of her work has added so much to the lives of the many children she has stood before as a teacher," said Dr. David S. Jenkins, superintendent of schools of Anne Arundel County.

Dr. Jenkins was one of several speakers who paid tribute to Mrs. Madeline Williams Tate, retiring member of the faculty of Bates High School, when the school honored her at a testimonial dinner on Wednesday evening.

He praised her for unstinted service and instruction to the children of Anne Arundel County and for her brotherly love and kindness in regards to their welfare. He broke down her 45 years of service by computing it into 8,100 days, and having taught 5,000 children.

More than 200 of Mrs. Tate's students and numerous friends attended the dinner, held at Carvel Hall.

Frank B. Butler, retired, her former principal at Bates, who gave greetings, saluted Mrs. Tate as a person who devoutly "believes in God and Man." He further described her as a person who believes in children and one who was "called to teach."

• • •

MRS. ANNIE HENRY, a teacher in the public schools of Baltimore, paid the following tribute to Mrs. Tate:

"She is magnanimous and not small; self-controlled and not weak; helpful and not affected; sociable and not snobbish; just and not unfair, and patient and not irritable."

The Rev. Leroy Bowman of the First Baptist Church, the honoree's pastor, said Mrs. Tate had been around so long that "we think of her as an institution."

He praised her for her punctuality in all her endeavors and the dedicated service that she has given to her church through her educational activities and music.

Significant words came from the president of the Bates High School Student Council, Miss Olivia Addison, a recent graduate, who praised Mrs. Tate for her "quantitative and qualitative service" to the school, the church and the community.

OTHER SPEAKERS were Douglas S. King, also former principal, now supervisor of instruction for secondary schools in Anne Arundel County and her former principal, Herbert S. Hilliard, principal of Bates who praised Mrs. Tate for being a person of dependability. He cited her for having developed a life that was productive and worthwhile and that her work was creative and responsible for a great deal of growth at the school.

Royal Thomas, vice-principal of Bates, presented Mrs. Tate with a portable television set on wheels and Mrs. Beulah Diggs, chairman of arrangements for the dinner, and guidance counselor, presented gifts on behalf of herself and from the following:

The Beacon, Bates official newspaper; Mr. and Mrs. John Weatherford, Mrs. Edith Douglas of Baltimore, Mrs. Ethel Thompson, the Entre Nous Club of which she is a member, the Bates Class of 1936, a purse from the Rev. James Johnson;

Also gifts from the Bates PTA, the Ladies' Aid, the Senior Choir, the Gospel Choir and the Woman's Organization of the First Baptist Church, and the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Bowman, and the custodial staff of the school, and from former students and the Pride of Annapolis Temple No. 76 and Elks Lodge No. 175.

Mrs. Ruth B. Spencer, former teacher and counselor of Bates, who could not attend the dinner because of illness, sent a telegram which stated that Mrs. Tate was dedicated to sincerity of purpose and is endowed with unquestionable learned ratifications inherent in service."

OTHER correspondence was received from the Daniel Brewster, U.S. Senator, Miss Nellie Buchanan of Baltimore, Mr. and Mrs. Houston Thompson and the Rev. B. G. Glenn of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Ida W. Rogers, guidance counselor, very charmingly served as toastmistress. The invocation and benediction were given by the Rev. Eugene Brown, a former student of Mrs. Tate.

Mrs. Tate, a very retiring and modest person, was the personification of poise in a lovely white flowered print of chiffon with a soft blue background over taffeta and she wore pearls accompanied by a large purple orchid. Her hat was made of a white starched straw with an off-the-face large rolled brim.

Mrs. William H. Campbell, a member of her "family," whom she has lived with most of the years she has spent in Annapolis, was wearing a beige lace creation topped by a ribbed nylon satin jacket of the same color. Her white flowered hat was enhanced by crystal jewelry and blue gloves.

A brother, Leroy A. Smith of Philadelphia attended the dinner. Mr. Smith is deputy regional director for the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Urban Renewal Administration.

AMONG GUESTS at the dinner, presented by Mr. Phillip Brown, vice principal were:

Dr. George Crawford, state supervisor, and Mrs. Crawford; Dr. J. Alexander Wiseman, Mr. Richard Clopper, director of Senior High Schools in the county, and Mrs. Clopper; Dr. Robert Schaffner, director of junior high schools and Mrs. Schaffner; Mrs. Elmer D. Waring, director of Special Services for Children of the school system;

Jones, supervisor of elementary instruction in the county; Mrs. Everett Pettigrew, supervisor of elementary education; Mrs. Thelma Sparks supervisor of mathematics; Miss Esther Hamilton and Mrs. Mary Brown, pupil personnel workers; Mrs. Eloise Richardson, AFRO-AMERICAN columnist;
