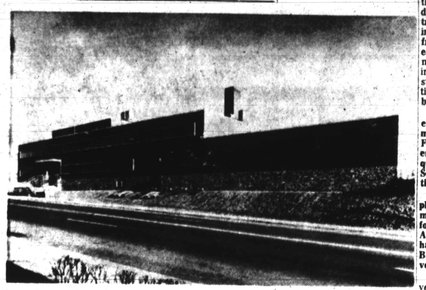
New Sealtest milk processing plant dedicated; open house is scheduled



NEW BALTIMORE HEADQUARTERS OF SEAL-TEST FOODS DIVISION

The new Baltimore headquarters of Sealtest Foods Division, National Dairy Products Corporation, at 2701 Loch Raven Road was dedicated Thursday.

The new building will serve as the center of a complete modernization and service program undertaken by Sealtest in the past 10 years in the Baltimore area.

The modern building, designed by Lockwood Greene Engineers, Inc. of New York and constructed by John Mc Shane of Maryland, is of split - level design located on a 10 - acre site. The two-story front portion of the building has a granite and brick facade, with stainless louvres designed to be controlled by the sun to maintain constant, adequate natural light in office areas during daylight hours.

This portion of the building contains the office area, cafeteria, dispensary and locker rooms for employees and a reception lobby of red brick with terrazzo flooring. Through a large window in the lobby area, one can view the entire milk processing operation.

THE BALANCE of the structure is of single floor design. The north side of the building consists of a drive - through area for tank trucks; raw milk is stored in silo - type tanks holding from 5,000 to 10,000 gallons each. Tren by gravity flow, milk goes through processing and bottling areas to a storage and load - out section on the south side of the building.

Theodore G. Heck if general manager of the Baltimore division of Sealtest Foods. Over 600 persons are employed at the new headquarters plant and at other Sealtest branches in the Baltimore area.

This recently completed plant replaces the Sealtest milk processing structure formerly located at Linden Ave. and Dolphin St. which has been razed as part of Baltimore's Area 12 Redevelopment Project.

Within the past seven years, Sealtest has built distribution centers in Dundalk, Cockeysville, Glen Burnie and Annapolis which are being operated in conjunction with the new plant. Also a bakery and garage are located at 500 N. Exter St.

THE NEW milk processing plant handles over a million quarts of milk weekly providing one of the largest single dairy outlets for milk produced by central Maryland farmers. An estimated 15,000 cows daily produce milk to meet the needs of Sealtest's customerw in Baltimore.

Special tours of the new facility were held for farmers who ship milk to the plant and for Sealtest Foods, Division, National Diary Products Corporation employees.

200 discuss way to rehabilitate criminals

is a Basket of Plenty

Fertile areas for those interested in the rehabilitation of criminals sparked the Eighth annual Meeting of the Maryland Probation, Parole and Correction Association Wednesday at Reformation Lutheran Church.

Morning workshops for the 200 representatives from over the state included discussions of mental health and crime, pre-release and half-way houses prison furloughs, community programs to prevent juvenile delinquency and programs to help narcotic users.

Distinguished members in their fields appearing on each of the five panels included Dr. Isadore Tuerk, State commissioner of mental hygiene; Vernon L. Pepersack, commissioner of the state Department of Correction; Charles E. Moylan Jr., state's attorney for Baltimore and Father Harry Laoney, who directs a narcotics rehabilitation program at St. Francis Xavier Church.

IN ONE workshop, the panel members concluded that most crime relates to mental health and that this type of mentality can be helped more easily than other type.

Rather than on a one-to-one basis, mental treatment for inmates is most usually successful when group therapy is used, the workshop heard.

Two factors stressed as leading to this type of criminality were poverty and the breakdown of the family.

Discussing legislation to help narcotics users, Gerald Siegel, who heads Gov. Tawes' committee to study dope addiction, stated that parole supervision would have to be extended indefinitely to give the user someone to lean on.

Father Maloney outlined his weekly programs to help released prisoners remain off dope. The program has been successful in providing a place for them to come, he said, and also helps in the securing of employment and stable influences.

DIFFERENT concepts for curtailing juvenile delinquency and the report that some of them have actually worked emerged from another workshop.

Miss Jane C. Mathieu, director of Echo HOUSE, a private community center in Baltimore, detailed the success of the unique experiment.

It provides a center for recreation and for solving neighborhood problems and differences for about 140 families.

A plan was aired from Charles County, which uses teachers to note pre-delinquency symptoms in students and then sets up conferences with parents.

Another plan which has met with success was given by Edgar J. Appelman, of the Juvenile probation office in Anne Arundel County.

Under this approach juvenile cases are settled out of court in combination with the appointment of a responsible resident in each block to supervise juveniles.

Anne Arundel reports that 70 per cent of the offenders do not return and that juvenile crime has been cut.

State's Attorney Moylan pinpointed the breakdown of the family structure as a factor in most crimes.

Two other panels pointed to the effectiveness of pre-release and half-way house programs and work release and prison furlough programs.

Mark S. Richmond, executive assistant to the director of the U.S. Bureau of Prisons of the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, warned, however, that the work release programs are not panaceas for all penal problems.

Historian Dr. Floyd Fleckinger was guest speaker for the affair. He noted the vast sums being spent on objective scientific studies and called for more emphasis on subjective understanding of people—"like the fine work the members of this association are doing."

Elected as president of the organization was M. David Barry, district supervisor in the State Department of Parole and Probation.
