No job? You can always broaden your horizons

By Cynthia K. Grandison
Reflections Staff Writer

In exploring the summer job market, this series covered the opinions of the youths directly affected, the positions available through government funded programs, black businesses and volunteer opportunities.

Surmising the scarcity of summer employment for persons 14 to 19 was not difficult. This was exemplified by the opinions of youths based on personal experience and knowledge of this country's economic status.

Further study revealed that federal programs, which so many depend on, had less money to disperse as compared to previous years. Consequently, these positions were already being filled.

Most private businesses were not hiring. Hospital volunteer work had the most vacancies.

A total of six job possibilities were found as a result of this reporter's efforts.

What is the solution? As a last resort, create your own activities. Here are some suggestions for fun block activities: talent show, fashion show, snowball stand, drama production.

Those persons equipped with the time and resources may want to create their own summer jobs. Much could be accomplished through an independent or small group venture.

One might consider handling small jobs for the neighbors on the block. Adults and the elderly are likely candidates because they don't usually have the time or energy to do those small but necessary chores.

Sweeping fronts and backyards, cutting grass trimming hedges, washing cars and windows, taking out trash, walking-a-dog, collecting saleable odds and ends people would like to dispose of are just a few suggestions. A modest fee, if any, is all you need charge.

Of course, if you want to be a champion diplomat, you could agree to whatever fee the person feels the job worthy of.

This may sound like "funky" work, but it's not. Think of it in this light, you are helping someone and beating boredom too. It's bound to be fun, especially with friends.

Fun Learning

A second cure for boredom, create your own fun learning experience. It may only be an inquiring phone call or bus ride away.

If you are the type person who always wonders, but never seems to get around to finding the answer, take time this summer.

Ever wondered how a television station is run? How a car engine operates. How this newspaper is put together?

What is it like to be ... whatever you are aspiring to be?

You may be surprised at how willing people are to spend a few minutes talking about themselves and/or their occupation. You might make a new friend. But remember to call first.

PLEASE patronize AFRO advertisers. They welcome your patronage.
