Clerics pray to defeat prayer amendment

By David E. Anderson
UPI Religious Writer

Some 150 religious opponents of returning prayer to public schools jammed a church basement near the capitol in Washington last week to celebrate the nation's heritage of religious freedom and to pray.

They prayed in English and non English tongues and invoked the Bible and the Koran. Their attire included rust colored robes, ceremonial feathers, clerical collars, neckties, open shirts and dresses.

"We're not against prayer, but against forced religious rituals," said Dr. Jimmy Allen, former president of the Southern Baptist Convention, the nation's largest protestant denomination.

The Coffee and juice celebration of religious liberty was sponsored by People for the American Way to call attention to the rich diversity of religious faiths in the United States and to underscore the fear that passage of a proposal to return government sponsored prayer to public schools would interfere with the religious liberty of minority faiths.

The Senate Judiciary Committee plans a hearing on a constitutional amendment to overturn the supreme court's 1962 and 1963 decisions prohibiting mandatory prayer and Bible reading in government financed schools.

"The first amendment was not written for the religious majority, but to defend one person who wants to disagree," said the Rev. Charles Bergstrom, head of the governmental affairs office of the Lutheran Council in the USA.

The low key, hour long session in the Lutheran Church of the Reformation mingled Christians and Jews, Buddhists and Moslems, blacks and whites, women clergy and the male laity.

The venerable Bhante Gunaratna chanted a Buddhist prayer and then translated it into English. "May all beings be happy and secure, may all beings have happy minds."

Mary Tyac, a Piscattaway Indian, speaking in his native language appealed to "the great spirit" to "Have pity on us."

"This is not a new issue for us," he said. "For 500 years our people have been denied the right to practice their religion."

Proponents of state sponsored prayer, said Allen, show "a lack of confidence in prayer itself by reaching out to the power of the state."

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, " said the Rev. Wesley Wiley, a black minister at Covenant Baptist Church in Washington. "Neither the President nor the congress seem to have understood my desires and I cannot trust them to fashion a prayer to satisfy them."

St. Katherine's stained glass windows designed by active church member

Richard Pye, a member of the Church of St. Katherine, 2001 Division St., said churches are filled with talented people and they should use their talent within their church.

Pye, a retired postal clerk and an active member of his church recently completed a four week course on designing stained glass windows.

As a member of the church, Pye said there were two broken windows in the church and he asked his pastor, the Rev. Peter Bramble if he could replace the windows.

He replaced the broken windows with a metric colorful stained glass windows he designed. The windows have been installed in the church and were dedicated to the love ones of the families of Richard and Margaret Pye.

Mayor Schaefer was among the guests attending the June 27 dedication service. Pye said other churches can also replace their broken windows with the metric design stained glass. "There are young artist in the churches and you must go search for classes where art is being taught," said Pye.

According to Pye, some churches have paid professionals more than $1,000 to have their broken windows replaced when members in their church can do the same thing if they are willing to take an art class.

Young Generation singers celebrate their anniversary

The Young Generation of Harford County celebrated their 10th anniversary at St. James AME Church on Gravel Hill Road.

More than 60 people attended the anniversary to hear invited groups sing two gospel selections as part of the musical program.

Opening with an upbeat processional selection, the Young Generation, dressed in light and dark blue colors, marched down the aisle singing, "We are the Young Generation," to the beat of drums, the twang of a bass guitar and accompanied by the piano.

The musicians for the day were Eric Watters on drums, James Watters on bass guitar and Kim Watters on piano. Cecelia Finney directed the Young Generation and also accompanied them on piano.

The mistress of ceremony for the occasion was Evang Mary Taylor who later offered the selection "Jesus Is Already here" near the end of the program.

Asbury Youth Choir from Asbury Community Choir was the guest group for the afternoon anniversary which began about 4 p.m.

They offered selections including "I Know It Was the Blood"; and "Can't Nobody Do Me Like Jesus."

Later, they came back singing "Amazing Grace" and "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah."

During the invitation extended by the Rev. Elder Edward C. Wilson, the church's acting pastor, the Asbury group rendered "Come to Jesus."

Other groups on the program included the Daughters of Zion from Zion Temple Holiness Church, the Zion Temple Youth Choir, and the Highway Holiness Church Youth Choir.

Eva Taylor was a featured soloist who sang "When I've Gone the Last Mile of the Way."

The featured group, the Young Generation, sang three selections including a slow but moving rendition of "I Made A Vow," the popular Gladys Knight tune revised for gospel singing, "Jesus is the Best Thing That Ever Happened to Me," and a selection from Keith Pringle's gospel album entitled "Call Him Up."

The congregation joined in with the singers by clapping, patting their feet and singing along with the various groups.

Presentations were made to Geraldine Hague, longtime advisor for the honored group, Evelyn Vaughan, who made the skirts for the females in the group and the musicians.

Closing the program, Renee Tann led the choirs and guests in a selection entitled "Sign Me Up."

Following the program, members, friends and invited guests congregated to the church hall where refreshments were served.

Why aren't there Priests who look like me

By John W. Templeton
Staff Writer

At age 12, young Lloyd Stephenson asked his Catholic priest why there were not priests "who look like me." The priest's response was that Stephenson should himself become a priest."

Two years later, Stephenson made that commitment to a long tedious road to the priesthood.

Father Stephenson is the first black priest to serve a Catholic parish in Richmond, Va. ever having been appointed to St. Paul's Catholic Church in Richmond last month.

The Newports News native, a strapping 6 - foot - 8 inches tall, studied in France, Italy, and England during the past 12 years before returning to the Diocese of Richmond. Since ordination in October 1980, he has worked at the Cathedral in Richmond.

During his travels, he noticed a fact that comes to him mind when some Protestants politely imply to him that Catholics are separate from the tradition of the black church.

"All over the world, the ethnic group had its own portrayal of Jesus," said Stephenson. "You had a Chinese Christ in Chinese churches, an African Jesus in African churches and a German Jesus among German people."

His point is that worldwide, his denomination is multi-ethnic, although the majority of its American members are white.

"There are hundreds of black saints, some: of whom date back before Martin Luther," said Stephenson.

"It was a black priest, Father Patrick Healy, who opened Georgetown University (in Washington, DC) and who became the first black bishop in the U. S. prior to the Civil War," he added.

"There have been four Popes from Africa; there are currently 12 or 13 black cardinals and the odds on favorite among Europeans when the last vacancy came up for pope was Cardinal Gantin, who is from African and occupies one of the highest posts at the Vatican," said the priest.

In America, black Catholics are active in seeking to incorporate the black religious tradition into the Catholic experience.

"It used to be that you were either Catholic or black," said Stephenson. "But we can be black fit into the ritual; the preaching style does fit into Catholicism."

Stephenson had many of his childhood questions answered during his travels around the world. "I saw black saints in churches in Europe, he recalled.

It was a big step for a pre-teen to make, to commit himself to a life of celibacy and service. "I had an awareness at 14 years old that I wanted to do something with my life where money wasn't important. I wanted to serve people, to give to people. I decided to enter the priesthood."

Stephenson was sent to a boarding school "not only for an education, but a place were they prepare you to be a priest in lifestyle and spirituality."

His seminary training lasted through high school, college and graduate school.

Along the way, he also developed his talents in classical dance, track and scrimmaged with the University of Maryland basketball team. "Priest are people, too," he quipped.

The rigors of his training equip him for an ardous schedule.

Hats off!

A great big salute to 18 - year - old Kathey Pressley.

She is the energetic captain of the 1200 block N. Washington St., one of the prettiest in the AFRO's annual Clean Block Campaign.

Miss Pressley and her co - workers have proved that ingenuity and hard work can beautify a neighborhood.

First of all, their block is located under railroad tracks which cross the East Baltimore Street.

The young people cleaned up the debris which had accumulated from the tracks. Then they went to work painting and improving their block.

The red and white decor, the window boxes, urns and sidewalk chairs are a sight to behold.

Hats off to Kathey Pressley and to her co - workers.

Cuff note: Miss Pressley is a June grad of Fairmount High Vocational School. She has won a scholarship to attend Community College of Baltimore: Good luck to her!

Please continue nominations to this column's Hats Off section.

Help us identify young people who shine.

Too many of us adults only notice our young people when they perform poorly. Let's encourage them when they do well.

Frontiers

Frontiers International's 41st annual convention in Philadelphia last month attracted several Baltimore members.

Pinkney Howell, president of the Baltimore chapter, and Mrs. Howell, president of the women's auxiliary, led the group.

Also there: Johnnie Jowles, the Salvation Army exec and Mesrs. and Mesdames Robert Johnson, Arthur Snowden, Eugene Prettyman, Samuel Marlow and Leslie Davis.

Annapolis area representatives there were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Holland, the educators.

Second District representative in attendance was Clement Martin of Prince George's County, MD.

U.S. Circuit Court Judge Leon Higginbotham Jr., was banquet speaker. He is author of a new book, "A Matter of Color," which was much in demand at the confab.

Vitiligo

Frontiers International was founded in 1936, by Nimrod Allen of Columbus, Ohio. At that time, blacks were barred from Rotary, Kiwanis and similar groups.

Since its inception, Frontiers has focused on service to others. It has 22 chapters in the following 14 states and D.C. — Ohio, MD., NC., IL., PA., TX., WI., NJ., NB., LA., MI., TN., FL., and VA.

National president is Robert Hill of Omaha, Neb. Frontiersmen call themselves yokefellows.

Women auxiliary members are Yokettes. National auxiliary head is Mrs. Ruth C. Easley of Philly.

Frontiers' pet project is Vitiligo, (the skin disease where people of dark color turn white).

Frontiers support a variety of charities in their own areas, but entire organization contributes to the National Frontiers Vitiligo Foundation for study of the ailment.

Vitiligo is not painful, only a cosmetic disability because it causes a change in pigmentation.

For the past 15 years the Frontiers' Vitiligo Foundation has awarded a total of $50,000 to the Howard University Medical School for research.

Emmer M. Lancaster of Akron, Ohio, is executive director of the Vitiligo Foundation.

Cuff: Local Frontier chapters welcome new members. Any male, 21 years or older, may apply.

Sole requirement the applicant must be of good character and reputable standing in his community and employed in a responsible position in business or institution or a profession.

About people

Continue prayers, please, for Dr. Roland N. Patterson. He is the former Baltimore city school superintendent who heads a N.Y. school district.

On Tuesday, he was transported by ambulance from a N.Y. hospital, here he has been confined for several weeks.

Get well cards should be addressed to Provident Hospital here in Baltimore. He's in Room 6008 - 1.

Mrs. Patterson's mother, Mrs. Jimmy Scott, and aunt, Mrs. Mittie Alonzo are here from Seattle.

This and that-

People who live in Baltimore — with all its problems — should visit other urban centers — like Pittsburgh and Buffalo, for example — and then they'll understand how Baltimore stands head and shoulders above them.

Downtown Pittsburgh on Saturday afternoon was dead as a door nob. Ditto, Buffalo.

While our Monumental City has its share of poverty, bad streets and dislocated families, the picture appears worse in the PA. and NY. towns we visited this weekend.

Met in Buffalo — Joe and Irstelle Easley, who are excited about demonstrating their new beauty products in the MD. area later this month.

All - white: That's right - that was the way it was on Monday when we joined the hundreds touring the famed Corning Glass Center in Corning, NY. (where they make Steuben crystal and corning ware.)

On the hour - long tour, we spied only one black face. She was the receptionist at the entrance who advised visitors to follow the guided tour lines.

All other employees in the demonstration, recreation, museum, shops and cafeteria were white!

Zeta Phi Beta Sorority co - founders are the Tyler sisters, Mrs. Viola Goins and Mrs. Myrtle Faithful. They attended the sorority's 62nd Boule in Richmond last month.

They are here visiting Mrs. Faithful's daughter and son - in - law, Dr. and Mrs. Lionel Desbordes (Jerri).

Mrs. Goins hails from Springfield, Ohio, Mrs. Faithful from Flushing, NY.

Unique business is International Communication Services (Mid - Atlantic Region).

Headquarters are in Philadelphia. Baltimore branch office is at 4153 Patterson Ave.

The firm visits conventions and other public gatherings, records proceedings and has the tapes ready for purchase minutes after the program is over, (at a reasonable price.)

We learned about this new business at the National Newspaper Publishers' Association meeting here at the Hyatt recently.

Harold B. Griffin is founder - president. Vice presidents are Art Hammond, Velma Griffin and Joyce Hammond. Moses Williamson is secretary - treasurer.
