and favorite sons and daughters into museums such as the Babe Ruth House at 216 Emory St.; the Mother Seton House at 600 N. Paca St., the Charles Carroll Mansion at 800 E. Lombard8, the Lillian Carroll Jackson Museum (1320 Eutaw Place), is the former home of a dynamic native Baltimorean who was president of the NAACP for 35 years, represents a positive thrust toward creating more shrines honoring blacks who have made major contributions to Baltimore City.

Tours of Baltimore with your children placing emphasis on the City's black cultural and historical presence will include visits to Morgan State University, Coppin State College, Sojourner-Douglass College, The Third World Museum and the Eubie Blake Cultural Center (formerly Gallery 409, 409 N. Charles St.). You may introduce your children to drama by taking them to see the Arena Players (Arena Playhouse, 801 McCulloh St.). My daughter Malani, who is 6, says her favorite place to visit is the Famous Ballroom (1717 N. Charles St.) and she is looking forward to September when the Left Bank Jazz Society will resume its weekly series of concerts. A new attraction which is quickly gaining attention is Great Blacks in Wax Museum, located in the 200 block of West Saratoga St. Where else do my children like to go in Baltimore. They love Druid Park and the zoo. They are especially fascinated by the Reptile House which features boa constrictors, cobras, lizards and other slithering creatures. They also like the Baltimore Museum of Art, the Walters Art Gallery, the Fire Museum (Eutaw and Fayette), the Peale Museum, Sunny Sundays in Markeplace. The shot tower which was built by slaves, the Lexington Market and taking long hikes to different parts of the City. Periodically, we will take the train to Washington, D.C. to explore the Smithsonian Institute, the Museum of African Art (Frederick Douglass Townhouse, 318 A St.N.E.) or the Washington Zoo. While trips out-of-town add an interesting dimension to life, my wife and I still have many places in Baltimore that we have yet to explore with our children.

While I like the Inner Harbor, its streamlined buildings and high powered festivals, I have come to realize that there are myriad other attractions in Baltimore that all too often go unnoticed by tourists and life long residents residents of the City. But I am determined that my children will spend substantial chunks of time exploring and learning about the city in which they live rather than spending countless, bleary eyed hours under the hypnotic influence of the omnipresent television.
