Also, DNR's Licensing and Consumer Services unit said a misunderstanding has arisen over who must obtain $50 oyster harvesting licenses. anyone taking part in oyster harvesting by diving, tonging (hand or patent), or handscraping is required to have a license, not just the captain or owner of the vessel involved.

In dredge boat or skipjack operations, the skipper is still the only one needing a $250 license.

coalition formed, "When research revealed that Baltimore had no organized coalition." They have designed posters and flyers, drafted numerous letters, created buttons and bumper stickers to drum up public support.

"The Baltimore Coalition which includes labor, the religious community, civil rights, peace, youth, environmental and women's rights organizations are contributing their resources, as well as finances to this important effort."

Persons interested in reserving space on a bus should contact the coalition immediately, as spaces are filling up rapidly. Individual organizations and groups must make their own bus arrangements.

Though buses for the general public are free, people are being asked to donate(whatever they can towards the costs of a $5 seat)."

Reservations for seats will only be handled in person at the Baltimore Coalition for the 20th Anniversary March on Washington Office, at 305 W. Monument Street, Room 208.

Coupons for reservations have also been attached to flyers and can be mailed in to the same address. "Phone reservations are strongly discouraged (and) will only be taken if someone cannot physically sign up in person.

Though individual group buses will leave from their own designated points, all coalition vehicles will depart from the parking lot south of 1100 N. Eutaw at 7:30 a.m. on August 27th.

The names, addresses, costs, and contact persons for both school buses and private bus companies are also available at local headquarters. The group stresses that it is imperative that all interested persons contact them in person or at 244-8171, as soon as possible.

As of August 10th, 26 buses have been reserved by the Baltimore Coalition. The following confirmed groups will be attending: Citizens Coalition for Urban Survival and the White Lung Association.

—Phone Strike

participation had not decreased.

A directory assistance operator who has worked for C&P for the past 11 years, said the workers are concerned about their future with the Company.

She said the workers want a guarantee "in black and white" that their positions will not be replaced by computers. The other major concern is the job pressures operators face on a day-to-day basis.

Each service operator is responsible for a processing quota of 900 to 1000 calls per day. If they do not reach that quota it is indicated in a formal evaluation and the ultimate action taken is dismissal.

Davis said it is very difficult to service all customers in the required minimum time of 27 seconds because sometimes they get calls from elderly individuals who require additional time.

The workers feel the demands of the job are bordering on unrealistic and that some concessions have to be made.

Davis said a large section of the workers are single parents, divorced or separated, but inspite of their family situations, they are all making the necessary sacrifices by joining in the picket.

C&P however is determined that the show must go on and it has thus placed its management staff in the capacity of all vacated positions.

Just said it is impossible to determine the losses the Company will suffer as a result of the strike but that they will more than likely be noticed "on both sides of the ledger."

"No one can say how many people decided not to make long distance phone calls...or who did not order new phones," said Just.

The spokesman said managers are beginning to get the hang of operations and things are "not normal" but the public is being serviced.

"Our major concern is to make sure that the customers who need service are getting it," he said.

C&P has asked the public's cooperation in the situation. Only emergency services are being considered. For example, those cutomers who may need new telephone service (an elderly sick person living alone, etc.) will be accomodated at this time.

Directory Assistance and operator services are being answered by managers who according to Mr. Just have a familiarity with the function of the equipment.

Carl Smith, the Company's Government Community Relations Manager, told the AFRO, the Mondawmin payment office is closed and that customers in that area who need to pay their bills, can do so at the branch offices of Maryland National Bank and Central Savings Bank in the Mall or at the C&P office located at 323 North Charles Street.

Smith is also fulfilling his share of extended obligations during the strike. He said he is working just like the employees of the service centers would be, and he may have to go to the Charles Street office this Sunday to assist in operator services.

"Everybody's pitching in. Everyone is rolling up their sleeves. Trying to keep customers happy is our basic goal...." said Smith.

Street said the union expects the talks in Washington to continue into next week.

Aquarium is still a popular attraction

The National Aquarium in Baltimore continued to be a popular and vital attraction during its second year of operation.

From July, 1982, through June, 1983, the facility received close to 1.4 million visitors— a total attendance comparable to that of the Aquarium's first year of operation.

Of those visitors, more than 121,000 people entered the building for a reduced admission fee through the Aquarium's Group Sales Program, and approximately 85,000 teachers and students came to the facility for programs coordinated by the Education Department.

In its second year, the aquarium also attracted more than 17,500 individual and family members representing 50,000 people and 180 corporate members in three categories.

The majority of those people visited the Aquarium during the spring and summer months.

To date, August, 1982, holds the record for highest attendance during the Aquarium's first and second years with a total in excess of 191,000 visitors. The highest attendance day was 'Dollar Day' on Aug. 8, 1982, with more than 12,000 visitors.

Throughout the 1982-83 fiscal year, approximately 61 percent were senior citizens, and 28 per cent were children. Almost 60 per cent of the Aquarium's visitors came from out-of-state.

The National Aquarium in Baltimore, located on Pier 3 in the city's Inner Harbor area, houses a total of 5,000 fish, birds, amphibians, reptiles, invertebrates, plants, and marine mammals. For more information about hours or admission fees, call 301-576-3810.

SHOT BY POLICE — Paramedics and police put a wounded man on a stretcher outside. police headquarters in Chicago after he was shot by a policeman. The man, identified as Edgar Mulligan, 30, was shot to death after he grabbed the gun of a guard officer and fired at him Aug. 4. Two policemen nearby shot Mulligan, who had just left at 11th floor court room at the headquarters building.

Blacks gaining experience thru Peace Corps

Becoming a Peace Corps Volunteer lets Americans gain a global perspective of the world — an experience prized by international companies, too.

For the past 22 years, over 100,000 Americans have served as Peace Corps volunteers in 95 countries in Africa, Asia, the Caribbean, Central America and South America. Between five to eight percent each year have been minorties.

Today, there are 5,200 Peace Corps volunteers in over 60 developing countries. Every day in these nations, someone asks, "Where are the black Americans?" Clearly, not enough black Americans have been involved in the Peace Corps, says Peace Corps Director Loret M. Ruppe.

Although black Americans always have been exceptional volunteers for domestic causes, what's behind the apparent lack of an international perspective to black America's voluntarism?

"Two reasons," says People Spurlock, Peace Corps' minority relations coordinator. "Not until recently have good jobs in the international corporations been opened up, based on experience abroad; and there haven't been many role models to follow of black Americans making it big in the international arena."

Charles Butler, a black Peace Corps volunteer from Florence,AL., is in Kenya teaching in a vocational program for school dropouts. He says he decided to join the Peace Corps because "there was a yearning to do something different, to see some places I'd studied about, to meet people I'd heard about, and to put to use some of the talents God gave me and some skills I had acquired in the meantime."

He adds laughingly, "My friends thought I was plumb crazy, going off to some God-forsaken place that they had never heard of."

Choosing to be a Peace Corps volunteer is never an easy decision for a black American to make. For those just finishing college, their families especially may worry about shirking the responsibility to get a job, perhaps to contribute toward the next sibling's going to college.

"Many parents don't look upon Peace Corps with the same pride as a big new job," Mrs. Spurlock says, "and they want to see their hard work pay off."

There are a lot of erroneous assumptions about why black Americans have not joined the Peace Corps to any significant extent, she explains. One is the belief that the Peace Corps is designed for white middle-class college youths to gain an international exposure. Another is that black Americans are reluctant to leave the United States and its problems for service overseas.

The first myth can be discounted because black Americans have been involved in the Peace Corps since its beginning in 1961, working directly with those in need and as administrators, using their training and experience in all areas of endeavor, says Mrs. Spurlock.

"The Peace Corps is not a youth organization," she notes; the average age of volunteers is 27 and rising, with more than 300 volunteers over 50 years of age. "A college degree is not required," she says, "although possessing a particular skill or trade, or a level of education, will help match specific requests from the overseas countries."

The second myth can be erased by examining the number of black Americans who have served in the Armed Forces overseas. "International service is not avoided," she says, "but the spirit of volunteerism among black Americans somehow has never caught up with the need to provide international skills.

"Becoming a Peace Corps volunteer is a chance for all Americans to join in the struggle for human dignity," Mrs. Spurlock says; "it is an education in foreign affairs, a cross-cultural experience. And, more importantly, it is an avenue for black Americans to hone their skills in preparation for new employment trends."

As international economic growth becomes more concentrated in developing economies, there will be more employment advantages for those individuals who have had work experience in developing countries and can speak foreign languages, she explains.

Blacks less likely to seek counseling

Living in a predominately white society can be very stressful to blacks, yet they are not as likely as whites to go to counselors for help, says a University of Florida counseling psychologist trying to change that.

"Traditionally, blacks tend to think of a counseling center as a place for crazy people to go, so they are very resistant to going," said Dr. Rosie Bingham, who sees most of the black students at UF who visit the campus Counseling Center.

All people face the same types of problems — from trying to get over a broken heart to deciding on a career. But, Bingham said, because they are in the minority, blacks sometimes feel a powerlessness or a lack of ownership within a white society that can exaggerate their other problems.

Talking to family and friends is fine, but, counselors can offer many things that a good friend cannot, she said.

"A good friend probably has limited experience from which to listen to your problems. He or she will probably listen and give advice based on what he or she has done in particular situations. That may be all right, but that may not take into account everything about you.
