Rabbi to ask for Jewish-black unity at 'March'

Rabbi Alexander M. Schindler, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, will deliver the closing benediction at ceremonies on August 27 in the nation's capital marking the 20th anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King's March on Washington, it was announced this week.

Rabbi Schindler, who heads the congregational arm of Reform Judaism in the United States and Canada, said the UAHC would take an active part in the event "because we are committed to the struggle for civil rights and the spirit of coalition and cooperation forged by Dr. King."

The Reform Jewish leader said he had accepted the invitation to deliver the closing prayer at the ceremonies in front of the Lincoln Memorial after receiving "assurances" from leaders of the March that they would disavow any anti-Israel or anti-Semitic act or statement made during the event.

Rabbi Schindler quoted from a letter he had received from Mrs. Coretta Scott King, widow of Dr. King and co-chairpersons of the March, and Walter Fauntroy, national director, in their own behalf and also in the names of eight other co-chairpersons of the event: Bishop James Armstrong, Asia Bennett, Tony Bonilla, Judy Goldsmith, Archbishop James Hickey, Dr. Benjamin Hooks, Dr. Joseph Lowery and Stevie Wonder.

Rabbi Schindler is also serving as a co-chairman of the March.

In their letter, the Black leaders said in part: "In the case where a divisive act or statement is made — e.g., one that is anti-Israel or anti-Semitic or defamatory to any group in the coalition — the co-chairs will publicly disavow such a statement or act as inconsistent with the spirit of the March and coalition."

Rabbi Schindler said this statement had been issued "because of fear that anti-Zionist or anti-Semitic groups would seek to exploit this historic event for the purpose of attacking Israel or Jews or otherwise diverting the March from its main purpose — to renew the great coalition of black and white, Christian and Jew, in support of the demand for jobs, for freedom and for peace."

The Reform Jewish leader conceded that some supporters of the March could be described as "anti-Israel" and that some Jewish groups had withdrawn from the March. "The dilemma facing Jewish organizations," he said, "was whether to stay in and fight to keep the March on target or withdraw and risk a rupture in already-strained black-Jewish relations.

"There was a further dilemma: to stay in and seek to exert our influence with our friends in the civil rights movement, with whom we have struggled side by side for 20 years or more, or abandon the field to Third World ideologies and let the civil rights movement fall, by default, into anti-Israel hands.

"We decided to stay in — and the responsible leaders of the March showed they were sensitive to our concerns. There will be a policy statement on the importance of world peace — but no specific strategy for achieving it. Fighting over that could have caused further divisions in our ranks." Rabbi Schindler continued:

"The response to the issues we raised has greatly heartened us, and we are proud to take our place, as a movement of American Jews, in the ranks of hundreds of thousands of our fellow-Americans who will be joining the March.

"I am deeply gratified that the Jewish community will be represented in the twentieth anniversary March in accordance with the highest moral and ethical values of the Jewish tradition and in keeping with our devotion to Israel's cause. I urge all Jews to participate in whatever way they deem appropriate to their observance of the Sabbath."

Women acclaimed in black cookbook

An 18-year-old girl and a 63-year-old grandmother will be honored tonight at an 8 p.m. gospel concert sponsored by Reynolds Metals Company at Bethel AME Church, 1300 Druid Hill Ave. Miss Millicent Harris and Mrs. Victoria Dyson Suber, both from Washington were winners of "The Way Mama Cooked It,' a recipe contest sponsored by Reynolds Consumer Products Division. Their winning recipes are among those featured in a Reynolds cookbook of the same name. The Voices of Eastern, The Imani Messengers and the Stansberry Specials, will provide the musical entertainment at the concert.

Admission is $2 plus a flap from any size carton or Reynolds Wrap household aluminum foil. The concert will culminate a day of Reynolds' Baltimore gospelfest activites for the winnders. A prayer breakfast will be held at 8 a.m. followed immediately by a press conference. The day also will include a luncheon and sightseeing tour of the city for the winners. The Baltimore gospelfest is the fourth in a series around the country that Reynolds has sponsored to honor the cookbook winners. The cookbook was developed to recognize traditional black southern cooking as a part of today's modern lifestyle.

New Shiloh sponsors citywide evangelistic crusade

Many phone calls pouring into the homes of Baltimoreans may not be usual ones. The calls may be coming from the New Shiloh Baptist Church, Fremont Avenue and Lanvale Street, announcing a big summer ending Baltimore City evangelistic crusade to be held at the Baltimore Civic Center, Sept. 2,3 and 4, 7 p.m.

Asked about the reception to the many calls being made, the many callers responded that the reception was positive and people were looking forward to being present for the three night event.

The church has put together a large crusade choir which will sing great hymns of faith, spirituals and gospels. A 100 voice Children's Choir will also sing, made up of children reached through the newly formed outreach ministry of the church, located where the church's new edifice will be built, Clifton Avenue and Payson Street. Jamal Badry, a nationally known singing evangelist, will also be singing along with others.

The primary purpose of the crusade will be to call Baltimore City to the Lord Jesus Christ, said the Rev. Dr. Harold A. Carter.

"There is a distinct need to get the gospel out beyond stained glass windows and to publicly declare the saving grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"We seek to do this, and we believe the result will speak for itself." The church hopes that by having the crusade at the Civic Center, people from all walks of life will attend. It is also felt that persons who do not feel comfortable going to Sunday local church services will respond to this invitation and hear the story of the gospel.

Rev. Carter, has preached the gospel in 20 different countries and will be preaching the gospel at the evangelistic crusade. There is no admission fee.

Nation's school lunch boxes will pack special treat

SAN FRANCISCO — The school lunch box is as much a part of growing up as the annual ritual of returning to school at summer's end.

But this year, millions of school children will carry something very untraditional in their lunch boxes as they trek back to classes. Juices and fruit punches packed in a reovlu-Jonary new paperboard carton are expected to be the hottest things in lurch boxes since the apple.

The cartons — 250ml block-shaped packages complete with their own straw — have taken the beverage business by storm. Children especially have been eager to purchase drinks produced by the new-to-America aseptic packaging method.

"Since January when we introduced Hawaiian Punch nationally in the paperboard carton, we've been operating our plants at capacity to meet demand," said Stephen G. Rothchild, vice president of marketing, dry grocery and beverage products for Del Monte Corp. "We're selling some six million servings of punch a week in these new cartons."

The paperboard cartons are considered ideal for lunch boxes. They require no refrigeration, are lightweight, offer the right amount for a youngster's lunch, and the shape fits rectangular boxes.

Research shows that the largest purchasers of the new paperboard cartons are children, Rothchild said. The straw makes the package fun for them, yet the package also appeals to adults who are taking the aseptic cartons to the beach, on picnics and to athletic events.

The secret to aseptic packinging is that the juice or juice drink is quickly heated to sterilize and sealed in a sterile carton in a sterile environment. This process yields excellent taste, because the beverage is heated much less than comparable cans or bottles, yet requires no refrigeration.

Currently, dozens of companies are producing beverages in paperboard cartons. Most of the juice drinks, fruit punches and juices are going into the 259ml cartons. However, some companies are looking at one-liter cartons for in-home consumption, as opposed to the primarily out-of-home use for the smaller size.

While 1983 is the first year in which American children will widely use aseptic beverages, in Europe the packaging has been a major factor in juice and milk sales for years. In the United Kingdom, for example, well over half of all fruit juices are sold in aseptic cartons.

New graduate program at MSU

Morgan State University's Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation will be offering Master of Science degrees through a new graduate program entitled Adapted and Developmental Education which begins this coming September.

This unique program was designed to aid physical educators who deal with handicapped students and who are required to plan, operate, and evaluate programs of motor development, exercise, and games.

The Adapted and Developmental Physical Education program is also designed to train generlist physical educators who wish to become specialist or resource teachers in programs that render services to the developmentally disabled.

The cirriculum is designed to provide a non-categorical, systematic approach to the assesment, programming and evaluation of types of developmental disabilities including persons that are orthopedically handicapped, mentally retarded, learning disabled, emotionally disturbed or multi-handicapped.

Presently, there is no program in the state of Maryland to train physical educators on the graduate level in how to teach the developmentally disabled, or how to implement the instructional process needed to provide physical education to the State's many handicapped citizens. There is a definite need for such programs which provide developmentally disabled person with emotional outlets that are derived from physical activities.

The field of adapted physical education includes varied elements of a rich hertiage dating back to the early Nineteenth Century. Known as the "corrective" period, systems of "medical gymnastics" were introduced by per Henrik Ling in Sweden in 1814, brought to America by Nissen and Posse some 70 years later, and instituted on the college level near the turn of the Century by Dr. Dudley Sargent at Harvard. The systems were designed for the amelioration and prevention of postural problems through specified corrective calisthenics.

The emphasis changed from "corrective" to "adaptive" between World War I and World War II. Instead of mundane calisthenics, games and sports were altered to allow participation by physically handicapped individuals.

Physical educators participated in this period through the rehabilitation programs of Howard Rusk and the physical education and recreation programs of George Stafford.

Most recently, the Education for All Handicapped Children Act (1975, P.L. 94-142) has impacted greatly upon the need for graduate level programs in adapted physical education. In addition to providing for due process of handicapped children in education and mandating education to take place in least restrictive environments, P.L. 94-142 mandates physical education programs for all handicapped students and establishes and educational process (the IEP) which describes an assessment, programming and evaluation model for instruction.

Consequently, the number of handicapped children with whom physical educators come in contact has increased, and the kind of instructional process, which must be provided for them, has been stipulated by law. Hence, changes in the professional preparation of physical educators who deal with the disabled become imperative.

VUU IS THE PLACE TO BE— Norman Scott Phillips of Woodlawn Senior High School was recognized as the top senior in the 1983 VUU graduating class. He was seen at the dinner reviewing VUU's new catalog with former Miss Virginia Union University and Paquita T. Fullwood, a sophomore majoring in business administration. Paquita is a graduate of Milford Mill High School and is the daughter of charter president Harlow Fullwood, Jr.
