BLACK WOMANHOOD

Cleveland, OH—According to an anthology edited by Alan Lomax and Raoul Abdul, Pharoah Akenaton, who ascended to the throne as head of the Egyptian empire in 1372, was author of the first poem known to have been written by a black poet.

"Hymn to the Sun," pays tribute to Nererti, Mistress of two lands; the queen who lives and flourishes forever and ever.

In the June 1984 edition of Dawn Magazine, on the cover, Candace Easterling models positive evidence and states the theme:

"Black womanhood, the most supremely beautiful womanhood of all times.
Lives and flourishes,
Forever and ever."

How may I get a copy?

BEAUTIFUL POEM

Cleveland, OH—Please tell Wylline B. Wall of Shaker Hts., OH that I loved her poem "A Black Creed," which appeared in the May issue of Dawn Magazine's Poetrie Gallerie.

If only it was followed. I plan to cut out the poem and pass it on. It certainly shows black pride.

Last month, we showed pictures of some of the people responsible for bringing you Dawn Magazine, and unfortunately we did not have a photo of our intrepid crossword puzzle deviser, Kenneth Jason Brown of Philadelphia.

A hurried call to Ken brought a photo—too late for inclusion in last month's Dawn. So, we print it today.
