Marchers reach Baltimore

In many ways the NAACP's latest vehicle to register voters is symbolic. The seventy-five-year-old civil rights organization is perhaps hopeful that African-Americans will remember the thousands of blacks who from the days of slavery until the present have continually struggled for the total enfranchisement of black in the United States.

The symbolism of the NAACP's East Coast Overground March is historically linked with the Underground Railroad, through which passed many blacks on their way to freedom up north.

The route of the 350 mile march from Richmond, Virginia to New York, follows the route taken by Harriet Tubman, who led countless slaves to freedom during slavery.

"We retrace the routes the slaves took to gain their freedom," said Joseph Madison, director of the NAACP Voter Education Department and leader of the marchers. "We think it's our responsibility as children of freedom to walk overground to maintain that freedom by emphasizing the ballot box."

The march which began Sunday in Richmond, with 50 marchers managed to register 13 persons in Virginia. Though disappointed in the dismally low registration figure, the leaders of the march blamed the states.

"Virginia was very frustrating for us. Virginia, has some of the most backward voter laws," Madison said. Virginia law does not allow postcard registration, and in the majority of counties, potential voters must go to the registrar's office to register."

"We feel very, very sad for the people in Virginia, to have to go through so much to do what should be their inalienable right," he said.

OVERGROUND MARCH...NAACP marchers on their way to Baltimore City. The group was walking along Route 1 in Laurel, Maryland Thursday afternoon.

The marchers moved from Virginia to Washington D.C., where they arrived Wednesday. They were welcomed in the capital by Mayor Marion Barry in a small rally and traveled by bus to Cambridge, Maryland.

In Cambridge the rally was even smaller, but by going door - to - door they managed to register about 107 people. After Cambridge the marchers went to Annapolis for yet another rally.

Thus, far, the Overground Marchers have managed to register over 150 persons in Maryland before returning to the District Wednesday night and on Thursday began to move along Route One, heading for first Columbia then Baltimore.

In Columbia, the marchers will rally at 3 p.m. at the First Baptist Church of Guilford and them move on to what is expected to be biggest rally in Baltimore City.

The rally took place at 4 p.m. in Mondawmin Mall.

Other stops in Baltimore were to include dinner and rally at Centennial United Methodist

City Rainbow Coalition has split into two movements

By Racine S. Winborne
AFRO Staff Writer

Jesse Jackson's Maryland campaign coordinator acknowledged this week that there are two local Rainbow movements in Baltimore.

Bennie Thayer, who managed Jackson's successful Maryland effort, said that his group, the Maryland Rainbow Coalition, is taking its direction from Rev. Jackson.

That direction has been questioned by some Jackson supporters who have established a separate group called the Baltimore Coalition Against Racism and Injustice (BCARI).

"We may not have moved as swiftly as they (BCARI) would like...but we follow the leadership of Rev. Jackson," said Thayer.

According to spokesperson Charles Brown, BCARI developed as an independent organization when a rift occurred between local rainbow members over whether the group would support a planned march to protest the "apartheid" conditions of local blacks.

He says that former BCARI colleague and Jackson delegate Sandra Stewart, expressed reservations for the group aligning with organizers of the march because she believed "it was bourgeois and not for masses."

Black caucus blasts governor's choice

By Tyrone Vines
AFRO Staff Writer

Delegate Elijah Cummings, chairman of the state's Legislative Black Caucus recently had strong words concerning Governor Harry Hughes' appointment of John F. X. O'Brien, to replace Theodore Thornton as secretary of personnel.

"There is a deputy secretary, Donald Tynes, who is black, qualified and was ready to take the position, but he was placed to the side and someone from outside the department was made his boss," Del. Cummings said.

These remarks came in wake of the Governors' seemingly quick decision to offer the vacant cabinet position to O'Brien instead of Tynes. This move by the executive reduced the number of cabinet positions held by blacks to one. There are 13 cabinet posts in the governors' office.

"I am extremely upset," Cummings said, "We had two blacks of 13 Cabinet posts—and now we have one of that 13. It seems like we are going backwards."

Del. Cummings was clearly disturbed by the decision of the Governor when he said, "This move by the Governor is insensitive. The first time Hughes call-

State audit lauds Morgan U. progress

Morgan State University has made substantial progress toward improving its fiscal management, according to a report issued by the State Legislative Auditor this week.

An auditor's report released in December, 1983 rated the school as "very poor" in compliance and accountability in fiscal procedures. The report, which convinced the school's board of regents last year that a change in leadership was needed at the university, made 24 recommendations for improvement at the school.

The recently released post-audit report cited 13 instances where the university has made full or substantial implementation of the audit report recommendations. Two other recommendations have been moderately implemented.

Commenting on the auditor's post-audit assessment the Interim President, Dr. Earl S. Richardson, said "Given the time frame of three-and-a-half months with which I have had to work with the staff in addressing the audit exceptions, I am exceptionally pleased with the outcome of the post audit review. Out of 24 recommendations contained in the original report, the auditors noted that 13 have been fully or substantially implemented, and two have been moderately implemented. So we still have much to do before the next audit in April, 1985 and the university is committed to continuing corrective efforts."

Dr. Richardson added, "It is important to note that in those areas where we did not do as well as we had expected, it is simply a matter of time. We have put in-

Cherry Hill group wants new leaders

By Eddie King
AFRO Staff Writer

Community businessman and Sixth District Association of Democratic Members president, Shepherd Burge, along with several other community activists, have requested the resignation of Sarah Bundy, president of the Cherry Hill Co-Ordinating Council.

Burge accuses Mrs. Bundy of being unresponsive to the needs of the residents of Cherry Hill, charging her with little, if any, action at all since her election to the office in 1980.

"The community has lost a tremendous amount of assets and has lost a lot of spirit, all because of inactiveness," said Burge.

Burge and his followers make specific references to an underdeveloped park which they say should have been finished some time ago.

They also accuse the neighborhood mini-bus program run by the Council of being deficient and poorly run with indications that some employees have not been paid for weeks.

A letter was received by Mrs. Bundy a little less than a month ago requesting her resignation by August 20. She did not act on the letter's request and as of Thursday. Burge reported that lawyers had filed an injunction insisting she cease her duties as president of the Council.

"I find that kind of odd," responded Mrs. Bundy. "You see, elections are next week. The problem here is that Mr. Burge is obsessed with running Cherry Hill."

Mrs. Bundy insists that there is some discontentment felt by Burge because she was elected to replace him when the mayor asked for his resignation from the same office in 1979 due to mishandling of funds.

A review of an earlier AFRO article written in 1980 and a 1980 Audit Report of the Council done by the Maryland Department of Mental Health and Hygiene showed that Burge had been suspended from his duties as the mayor's representative to Cherry Hill pending an outcome of an audit initiated by the Coordinating Council, of which he was also president at the time.

Shake and Bake advisory committee taking shape

Two proposed advisory committees that would assist the financially troubled Shake and Bake Family Fun Center by attracting monetary support from major corporations and encourage greater patronage from surrounding communities are expected to be in place as early as next week.

Center press director Ron Rose announced on Wednesday that the business and community advisory committees will be operative sometime next-week, but he declined to disclose the names of any possible members.

He did say that a number of people from various civic and business groups had been contacted in the past few days.

Shake and Bake officials announced the formation of the special panels during a closed-door meeting with the city trustees on Monday.

Meanwhile, according to at least one source, consecrated Catholic Auxiliary Bishop John H. Ricard has been asked to sit on the business advisory committee.

The bishop, who serves as the Baltimore archdiocese's Urban Vicar and presides over the city's 46 parishes and two missions, reportedly met with Shake and Bake manager Glenn Doughty a few days ago.

When contacted by the AFRO, Bishop Ricard confirmed that a meeting between the two parties did take place and said that he is taking the matter under consideration.

"I asked Mr. Doughty to inform me in writing as to what the committee would consist of and what its expectations will be. I'll consider it very seriously," the bishop explained on Wednesday.

The 44-year-old Ricard became the city's first black Catholic bishop during ceremonies held at the Cathedral of Mary our Queen on July 2nd, Bishop Ricard also stated that a decision will be forthcoming once the Shake and Bake correspondence is received.

He said that continued support for the two-year-old recreational facility was a major priority and that parochial students were encouraged to participate in after-school activities at the center.
