any time during the present S and L crisis in Maryland."

Mr. Lansey, age 29, said the association comes under the executive order issued to the state's 102 privately insured savings and loan associations Tuesday by Gov. Harry Hughes.

The order which in effect seized the state's S and L associations sets a ceiling of $1,000 a month per account on withdrawals.

Ideal's president E. Gaines Lansey told the AFRO the firm has in excess of 4,000 depositors. He emphasized that Ideal is not a private firm and is owned by its depositors.

Ideal is open Monday through Thursday, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

In addition to E. Gaines Lansey, president, other officers are:

Miss Yvonne F. Lansey, executive vice president; Mrs. Madeline W. Murphy, treasurer and Dr. Jean F. Turpin, secretary.

Directors are Benjamin L. Brown, E. Gaines Lansey, Miss Yvonne F. Lansey, Leslie L. Lewis, Arthur W. Murphy, Mrs. Madeline W. Murphy, Mrs. Camilla M. Sherrard, Gerald A. Smith and Dr. Jean F. Turpin.

As of Dec. 31, 1984, the association's statement of condition revealed total assets to be $6,581,961. Each account is insured to $100,000 by the Maryland Savings Share Insurance Corporation.

The statement discloses that the firm is a depository for Estate Trust Funds and Guardianship Accounts. High yield savings certificates are available. As of Jan. 1, 1985, the 6 percent dividend is compounded daily and paid quarterly on Pass Book Accounts at an annual rate.

his career as a printer at the Houston, Texas INFORMER and the KANSAS CITY CALL.

In August 1935, he began work as an ad compositor at the Baltimore AFRO. At the time of his death, he was on sick leave from his post as mechanical department foreman in charge of ad composition.

During his nearly five decades at the AFRO, he received numerous citations, including one on the occasion of his 40th anniversary. It praised him as "a professional in his field, with broad knowledge of every aspect of advertising layout and makeup ... respected by his peers for his competence and his ability to get the job done."

Other awards from the company saluted him as a very valued employee." In 1975, fellow employees picked him as "outstanding employee of the year."

Mr. Reynolds is survived by his wife of 45 years, the former Verniece Ward Mosley, clubwoman and retired Baltimore City educator. Together, they enjoyed travel all over the U.S. and abroad and delighted friends with stories of their trips to Europe, China, Japan, Russia and Africa.

They were planning a visit to Germany when he became ill, last October.

The Reynoldses home in the Ashburton section of West Baltimore is filled with photos and other mementos of their trips.

Mr. Reynolds was an avid baseball fan and attended many World Series games.

savings and loans, a stampede. "If everyone takes their money out of S&Ls, there won't be enough money to pay the people who have to be paid," he said.

Calling the mass withdrawals, "an act of self-fulfilling prophecy," Blount stressed that laws have to be enacted to "protect the interests of the depositors."

Del. Howard "Pete" Rawlings said of the special session; "What the governor is trying to do is reestablish public confidence in the Maryland savings and loan industry."

While he supports the special session, Rawlings has some questions as to how the events leading up to the session have been handled.

"Why did the state allow MSSIC to operate under the pretense that it was a government agency?"

Rawlings also questioned the carriage of justice in the scandals.

"The individuals who participated in the schemes have underminded our faith in S&Ls. They've held up Maryland across the country, in the media, in an unfortunate light in terms of confidence.

"These individuals almost single - handedly destroyed the S&L industry in the state, and seemingly, they have gotten away scot-free," he added.

Rawlings said the public will have to pay to rescue the S&L industry. It will start by paying for today's session which is expected to cost around $8,000.

During the special session, the governor is expected to consider as many as six pieces of legislation designed to contain the situation, including one that would grant the governor even broader powers to do whatever needs to be done to put troubled S&Ls on sound financial ground.

Rawlings said he expected that the governor might seek a bond issue to create a "pool of funds to cover any other problems that a S&L might have."

Sen. Blount doesn't expect a bond issue, but he declined to discuss specifics. "In the final analysis, we have to protect everybody's money."

Governor Hughes is expected to seek $200 million to help bail out the ailing industry. He will also introduce legislation to replace MSSIC, (Maryland Savings-Share Insurance Corporation) the private insurance program that now insures 102 state-chartered S&Ls, with one fully backed by the state, which would assume the financial liability.

Blount expects that the new agency will "pretty much mirror the requirements of the FSLIC (Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.).

"The new board will have greater power to insure that what's happened at Old Court, won't happen again," Blount said.

people who wanted to make sure their savings were federally insured. They have been advised that all savings are not only insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, but backed to the full $100,000 insured amount by the U.S. Government.

Advance Federal is featured in the June 1985 issue of Black Enterprise Magazine as "Savings and Loan Association Of the year." In the story headed "Advance proceeds with caution," the Baltimore thrift is described as providing "friendly reliable service and a conservative loan portfolio that keep Baltimore's Advance Federal on a straight and steady coure."

It is noted that Advance Federal ranks no. 10 on the magazine's annual list of 35 most successful black-owned savings and loans in the nation, with assets, as of December 31, 1984, in excess of $30½ million.

In the last 27 years, Advance Federal has granted over $44½ million in mortgage loans to churches, business and home buyers in the Baltimore area. over $8 million of these loans have gone to churches.

Among them is the solar heated, $1.5 million Providence Baptist on Pennsylvania Ave. in west Baltimore. The Enterprise article quotes the pastor, Rev. Marcus Wood, as saying he was turned down by two major financial institutions and was able to build the modern facility only because Advance Federal loaned the church $625,000 to help finance it, and, "now we have our church and are enjoying every minute of it."

Volunteer

The dedicated volunteer workers feel great about meeting with Sharon Joyner and discussing her past and present experiences as a volunteer worker at a community center for 15 years, and how she is now putting her experience into the community. Sharon remembers her experiences with the Community Action Agency located at 1300 W. Lexington St.

As she recalls, "At that time I gladly remember I was a volunteer file clerk, a receptionist, a tutor. I taught sewing and cooking classes to young girls in the community. Ranging from the ages of eight to 16 years old. The teenagers and I held rap sessions on drug abuse, pregnancy, and ordinary teenage talk. Most of the teenagers enjoyed it very much.

"To a lot of the teenagers it was the natural thing to do to come to the center rather than hanging around in the playground after school where there were drugs, alcohol and trouble. When the center relocated in the 900 block West Fayette St. I continued to volunteer my services. I did most of the same duties as before along with the cheese program, community surveying to find out what the people in the community wanted as far as improving their community, to make it a better place to live.

"I learned the ways of many people through my volunteer experiences."

After a time Sharon then left the Urban Services Agency for a short while and went to explore other interesting volunteer jobs. She was with the Department of Social Services on Guilford Avenue for awhile. It was there that she learned all the different services they offered. She learned all the operations of the day care provider program. She has volunteered at various local city public schools and local union offices and hospitals.

She learned quite a bit about dealing with the community effectively. Sharon is now in the process of returning some of her learnings back into the community from the experiences that she has learned.

As of March 27, Sharon has created a job bank program at the Greater Model Community Center No. 19 located at 1051 W. Saratoga St. So far she has been successful in employing 15 people in various jobs in the area of the center and has received over 100 applications for the job bank program. Sharon believes the program will be a growing success. Sharon also has job training referrals available and have contacts with the Marine Corps and other branches of the armed services.

Marcus Nole, the director and the complete staff at U.S.A. Center No. 19 have been most kind and supportive of Sharon. She really loves helping and talking to people.

Some tips on how to keep children safe

By Valerie Smith-Madden
AFRO Staff Writer

It happens all the time. One minute, your child is at your side and the next he's gone. Fortunate, you spy him across the store or down the street. But what if you're not so lucky the next time?

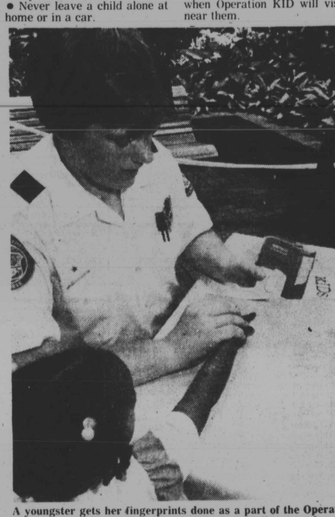
What can you do to help prevent your child from becoming one of more than 1.5 million children who are deemed missing persons each year?

Richard Byrd, Coordinator of Operation KID, a campaign to reduce the number of missing children across the state, has these suggestions.

- Know your neighbors and their children. Encourage them to report any suspicious actions.
- Always accompany your child to a public restroom.
- Never leave a child alone at home or in a car.
- Teach children to tell you where they're going and have them inform you when they're changing destinations.
- Teach children their full name, address and telephone number.
- If children feel threatened by a stranger, tell them to create a disturbance and to run to an adult they know or a police officer or a teacher.
- Never let children wander off in a department store or a shopping center.
- Teach children to answer the door in a safe way and never open it to a stranger.

The above information is contained in a booklet given to parents when their children participate in Operation KID.

Interested parents should call WBAL-TV at 467-3000 to find when Operation KID will visit near them.



A youngster gets her fingerprints done as a part of the Operation K.I.D. campaign recently held at Mondawmin Mall on saturday. The campaign hopes to reduce the number of missing children by providing parents with an ID card with vital information on the child.

Hopkins releases first report on AIDS and local gay men

Thirty percent of the 1,153 homosexual men involved in an AIDS study at The Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions have antibodies to the HTLV-III virus associated with AIDS, but only two men have developed AIDS since the research began in April 1984, according to preliminary results.

"We believe that not everyone who develops antibodies to HTLV-III virus will develop AIDS," says B. Frank Polk, M.D., associate professor of epidemiology and medicine at Hopkins and principal investigator of the Study to Help the AIDS Research Effort (SHARE). "It is currently estimated that five to 20 percent of those infected with the virus may develop AIDS."

Polk hopes that, by following the SHARE participants who develop antibodies to HTLV-III in their blood, more can be learned about the precursors and progression of the disease. It is estimated that 10 percent of susceptible SHARE participants will develop antibodies each year.

"But the process of determing who will develop AIDS can require several years," Polk notes. "Earlier estimates placed the median incubation period, from infection with the virus to onset of the disease, at one to three years, but we now believe it may be five years or more."

The study, part of a $17 million AIDS research effort in Baltimore and four other cities will participants for three and a half years, conducting extensive medical tests and looking for development of antibodies. The research is supported by the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease and the National Cancer Institute.

AIDS has been diagnosed in almost 10,000 Americans as of April 19. Of those, 48 percent have died. In Maryland, 147 AIDS cases have been diagnosed, of which 54 percent have died. During the last year, the number of reported AIDS cases in Maryland has climbed 195 percent, averaging three new diagnosed cases each week. The number of AIDS cases in the United States will double in the next year, Polk predicts.

"We know that if gay men modify their behavior by reducing the number of partners, the risk of AIDS will decrease," Polk continues. "Now that the FDA-approved blood test can be used to to screen blood, recipients of transfusions will not be at risk. However, we will continue to see new cases of AIDS in previously transfused persons as they complete the incubation period."

He adds that the risk of AIDS also could be reduced among intravenous drug users if they used clean needles and didn't share their needles.

In preliminary results from the other NIH studies of AIDS around the country, Los Angeles reported a 54 percent antibody prevalence among participants, Chicago had 45 percent and Pittsburgh 24 percent.

Along with screening blood specimens for antibodies, SHARE investigators have begun looking for the virus in body tissues and examining changes among T-lymphocytes, the white blood cells that maintain the immune system. AIDS patients suffer from a deteriorating immunology system, which permits other infections to develop. These include Epstein-Barr virus and cytomegalovirus, infections also common among gay men. Hopkins scientists also are investigating these infections and their relationships to AIDS.
