cars — including a hand-made German Bitter and a 1962 Rolls Royce Silver Cloud — and most of the furniture at the Levitt's sprawling $325,000 Baltimore County home to cover a $1.67 million lien filed against the couple for alleged non-payment of taxes.

The state comptroller's office has also placed liens on Levitt-owned properties from Harford County to Ocean City to $226,000 in outstanding state income taxes, penalties and interest.

Jeffrey Levitt has seen his lavish world of summer homes in Palm Beach, Fla., and $15,000 golf carts, come crumbling down — at least for now.

First Progressive Savings and Loan hired Jeffrey Levitt as a settlement attorney in the 1970s, and thus began his career as a thrift official.

By 1978 Levitt was the thrift's secretary. That same year, the Maryland Savings-Share Insurance Corp., the former private insurer of 102 state thrifts, found First Progressive "in flagrant violations of Maryland laws and regulations," according to Preston's 457-page report.

First Progressive went on to merge with Old Court, with Jeffrey Levitt at its head. The Baltimore thrift, which offered some of the highest interest rates in the nation, attracted out-of-state depositors from New York to Florida and grew to become the second largest thrift under the MSSIC system.

By 1982, Levitt and Old Court were a regular topic of conversation at MSSIC board meetings, but MSSIC did not take any punitive action against Levitt's management practices until it was too late.

In January 1985 — just four months before Levitt was ousted from Old Court — MSSIC director Charles Hogg introduced Dr. Huell Connor, Jr., a Baltimore psychiatrist and friend of Hogg's, to Levitt.

Connor was subsequently placed on Old Court's payroll "to help Levitt deal with the tragedy of being a millionaire," Preston said in his report. "Hogg seems to have pictured Levitt as a super-successful person whose principal problem was dealing with his own success. He just could not get organized."
