Rev. William Brown urges addicts to get high on Christ

"Drug addiction must be fought religiously," declared Apostle William Brown, pastor of the worldwide Salvation and Deliverance Church at the opening of this year's Holy Ghost Revival which began Sunday, August 3rd and will continue through Sunday, August 17, under the mammoth tent at 116th Street between Lenox and Fifth Avenues.

"Christ not Crack — Hope not Dope" is this year's theme, asserted Dr. Brown, "since we know the greatest high of all comes from God. Religious leaders and social experts have long agreed that addiction to drugs is a sickness of the soul. A permanent recovery must involve God, prayer and spiritual fellowship.

"Crack is a demon within you," he continued, "and no amount of community services or drug education can cure or cast out this demon. Deliverance comes only through the grace of God, and the men of God must now reach into the streets and bring church to the people if we are truly to serve our ministries," Dr. Brown informed the thousands of worshippers who attended the opening camp meeting.

"More than 500 young people were brought to Christ during last year's tent revival," stated Dr. Brown, overseer of the more than 140 churches affiliated with the Salvation and Deliverance worldwide movement, "and we are continuing to focus on our youth because Christ, not drugs must be the natural order of their lives."

Guest preachers who will be participating in the evening services at 7:30 p.m. are: Rev. Del Shields, host of WWRL's "Morning Fellowship Program" and Senior Minister, Zion Gospel Church; Dr. C. R. Johnson, Pastor, Brooklyn Tabernacle Deliverance Center; Rev. Leon Hatten, Pastor, Central Avenue Deliverance Tabernacle, Newark, New Jersey; Apostle Willie Williams, Pastor, City of Refuge Deliverance Church, New Haven, Conn.; Apostle Stanley Crumpler, Pastor, Salvation and Deliverance Church, Wyandanch, L.I.; Dr. Allen McDaniel, Pastor, Greater Emmanuel Temple; Bishop David Priestley, Bethany Deliverance Church; Apostle Charles Mason, Christ Temple Deliverance Church; and Pastor Louis Bligen, Salvation and Deliverance Church, Bronx.

Chairing the teaching services at 12 noon daily will be Bishop R. A. Tracey, Belfield Apostolic Deliverance Church, Jamaica, West Indies; Minister Clyde Jones; Evangelist Steve Newton; Prophetess J. Kelly; Evangelist Lorraine Blunt; and Minister Cheryl Glover Jones, Principal of the School on the Hill and Executive Director of the Children's Sugar Hill Academy.

Minister Aaron Garrett, a former gang leader and drug addict, who serves as President of the Salvation and Deliverance Worldwide Youth Movement, will chair the Youth Night program on Saturday, August 16.

The evening services will also include performances by the 101-voice Salvation and Deliverance Radio Choir, which includes the voices of Sister Betty Newsome, soprano and former featured dancer, singer and composer with the James Brown Band; Minister James E. Booker, Jr., baritone, son of James E. Booker, national and international public relations consultant and former special advisor to President Lyndon Baines Johnson; and Sister Marilyn Wardlaw, a former drug addict who is now a preacher of the gospel.

Additional musical performances will feature Rev. James McClain, a former bank robber whose recent hit record, "Blow Your Kingdom Down," received three stars in the gospel poll; the Soldiers of Deliverance; the Amazing Grace Choir, directed by Sister Betty Williams; and the Voices of Deliverance, directed by Sister Doris Davis and featuring the voice of nine-year-old Minister Quincy Thomas.

Devotional service leaders include Evangelist Elizabeth Bandy, President of the Missionaries Board; Sister Cynthia Scott, member, Women Ministers' Board; Bishop Errol G. Gallimore, President, the Board of Ministers; and Dr. Jerome King, a former addict and street gang member, who is now Dean of the St. Paul Bible College.

The Salvation and Deliverance Church was founded in Harlem in 1975 by Dr. William Brown, a former corporate executive with doctorates in business administration, education and theology, who was cited in the recent edition of "Who's Who's In America."

"The future of the Salvation and Deliverance Holiness Movement is bright," stated Dr. Brown, "and we have grown from a small congregation in Harlem to more than 140 affiliated churches in South Africa, West Africa, the West Indies, Canada, East Indies, Haiti, Spanish Honduras and the United States. Our missionary work now encompasses 16 grade schools, one trade school, three Bible colleges and one orphanage.

The Salvation and Deliverance Headquarters Church at 37 West 116th Street provides in addition to daily devotional services, the graduate-degree accredited St. Paul Bible College, a 60-acre Christian resort and retreat in upstate New York, and a 24-hour live prayer tower. The regular church services on Friday and Sunday are heard or seen in 41 states and 46 countries around the world.

Admission to the mammoth tent is free during the 15-day revival camp meeting. The tent, electrical generator and chairs for more than 1,000 worshippers were donated by Dr. C. R. Johnson, spiritual leader of the Brooklyn Tabernacle Church.

Sells moved to write gospel

Seven months ago, a church sister asked Carl Sells -- if the world was coming to an end, would you go to heaven?

"I immediately went into the house and wrote my first gospel song, "Victory in Jesus," said the young 22-year-old songwriter.

Sells, who has been saved for seven months believes that God has given him a talent that he was meant to use.

"I remember when my sister and brother learned about the gospel songs that I was writing, they were shocked because I used to party and the only songwriting I did was "rap" songs," admitted Sells, who presently attends Ebenezer Baptist Church, where Rev. Clarence Poole is the pastor.

Right now Sells says that he is strugling with the decision whether to write strictly gospel or to also write "world" music. "I want a lot of recognition. I want to sit next to my idols Quincy Jones, Shirley Caesar and Whitney Houston and have them do my songs," said Sells.

"Everything I write turns to gold and any fame and fortune that comes my way, I'd like to use to help people. My sister has always wanted a 300 ZX and I'd love to see that she gets one," he said.

"I can take other people's ideas and turn them into song. I guess that makes me a lyricist, said Sells, who is looking forward to much success in the future.

Sells attended the Harbor City Center and grew up mainly in East Baltimore. His family presently lives in Fort Washington.

Second Annual Rally Day held in Harlem Park Square

The Second Annual Rally Day, given by the Christian Men's Fellowship Organization, was held in Harlem Park Square on Saturday, July 19th. The theme was "Lifting Up Jesus."

A joyous time was had with music organized and conducted by Bro. Tony Smith. The following singing groups were represented: Robert Smith and Company (a recording artist), Fernando Allen, Craig Thomas and the Mass Choir, and soloist Jean Fleming. The crowd responded in a big way.

The excitement continued to run high during the preaching of the gospel by several ministers from Baltimore area churches. Reverend Walter S. Thomas of the New Psalmist Baptist church talked about how a person can be made whole through the Word of God and that a person must give their life to God.

Reverend Dr. Claxton of New Creation Church stated that a soul is lost without Christ, and you must come to Christ to be saved. Reverend Samuel Burns lifted the Word about "Salvation By Faith," while Reverend Howard Ricks inspired the crowd with a sermon entitled "Whatever It Takes." Reverend Gerald Watson preached about "God So Loved The World."

Evangelist Esther Melcher, associate minister from Gillis Memorial C.C. Church was the fine, spirit-filled M.C. for the entire afternoon.

Several churches and organizations participated in the Rally Day activities, including Shiloh Community Church, Dalton Baptist, Unity Baptist, East Baltimore Deliverance, Believer's Haven, New Psalmist Baptist and New Creation.

The Christian Men's Fellowship Softball League came to Harlem Park area because there were many souls to be saved. As a result of the singing and heartfelt sermons, many people gave their hearts to Christ.

Reverend James Ross, president of the league, stated that Rally Day will be held each year in Harlem Park.

New Psalmist Christian School to open in September

The New Psalmist Christian School will open its doors on September 2 for the first time, all because of a vision that Dr. Walter Thomas, pastor of the New Psalmist Baptist Church, had of an education in which Jesus Christ would be central.

The school's philosophy states that an education at the New Psalmist Baptist Church will enable children to become aware of the love of God and to respond with a true faith to His love, in ways that will help them to develop as children of God, living in accordance with His will.

This education will assist students at each stage of development, learning such disciplines as physical and natural sciences, as well as human living.

In 1980, the school was still only a vision, but under the leadership of Deacon Thomas Sinclair and Linda Perry, a Christian school committee was set up to explore options for raising funds, designing a curriculum, establishing a budget, looking for facilities, and also investigating the criterion for the Department of Education.

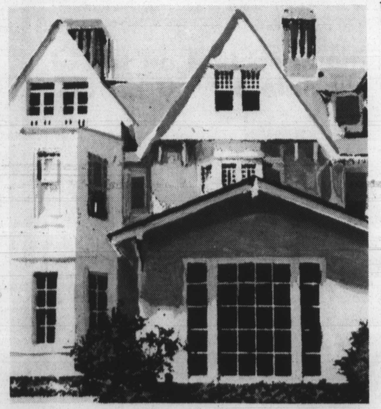
However, Leah White, who will be the administrator of the school said, "The Lord sent us 19 acres. We have had to overcome obstacles, nothing was given to us on a silver platter."

The school will temporarily be housed in the mansion, at 4501 Old Frederick Rd., which is the site where construction is currently underway for the completion of a new school building, to be finished by November.

During the day, ministers and educators will use the facility as a learning center. They will build a spiritual and instructional foundation in the minds of the children in the community.

Children in kindergarten through middle school will be offered an education which emphasizes the teachings of Jesus Christ as well as a certified elementary-middle school curriculum.

Children will learn discipline and responsibility to God, to self and to others. The school intends to develop strong moral leaders with an educational foundation which prepares them to compete in a changing world.



The New Psalmist Christian School scheduled to open September 2 will have temporary residence in this mansion house, located at 4501 Old Frederick Rd. New facilities are currently under construction at the same site and will be finished in November.

Ethiopian Orthodox has begun major tree-planting

Tree Planting

NEW YORK (UMNS)—Now that rains have come to Ethiopia, the Ethiopian Orthodox Church has begun a major program of tree-planting, according to Norma Kehrberg, head of the United Methodist Committee on Relief.

The new program, part of a major government initiative, will help farmers conserve topsoil so they can grow more food for their families, Ms. Kehrberg explained.

"The rains have been substantial and everything is green," said the relief official, reporting on a July 25-29 visit to three nothern Ethiopian centers on the edge of history - making 1984 drought area.

She was accompanied by Zemedhun Bezuwork, executive director of the Ethiopian Church's development and interchurch aid department.

"Everywhere people are optimistic about the 1986 crop," she added. In 1985 seeds were in short supply but this year Ethiopian Church officials expect a full harvest. She also noted huge supplies of livestock including donkeys, goats, sheep and cattle.

The Ethiopian Church is utilizing its chief resource, its 250,000 trained clergy, by teaching them reforestation, before they return home to establish nurseries on church property and train church members to plant trees in the community.

Some 45,000 eucalyptus and acacia trees have already been planted by Ethiopian Church members, Ms. Kahrberg reported. By year's end the church will have 10 nurseries on church property, each planting 30,000 trees.

At Debre Tabor she saw 30,000 seedlings, planted three weeks before at St. Mary's Church. Holy Trinity Church is also cooperating in the effort.

The relief executive also viewed 15,000 trees 4-5 inches tall at the Clergy Training Center at Bahar Dar near Lake Tana at the head of the Nile River.

The center is also priming clergy to educate parishioners on the food value of fish, which has never been high on the Ethiopians' diet. The center has a one-year experimental program to determine what lake fish are available and to increase their use.

In the early days of the famine the church was not fully mobilized to cooperate in government efforts, partly because many church leaders had been killed or imprisoned during the revolution.

Working with the World Council of Churches and other ecumenical groups, the Ethiopian Church began distributing food through its orphanages and was soon playing a key role in feeding and distribution centers. It is mobilized to join the country's rehabilitation effort.

Feeding stations have been closed, Ms. Kehrberg noted, but some distribution centers remain open providing grain to farmers who have not yet had a full crop. The official saw one such at Addis Zemen.

Relief officials are also watching two areas of possible drought in south and southeastern Ethiopia, at Illubardor and Wellega. "They're gearing up to supply food if it is needed," she said.

With more than half of Ethiopia's population Christians, the church is in a good position to give moral impetus to the government's reforestation program, the relief official said.

"This gives the committee a unique opportunity to support the church as it works within the government plan to develop the country," she said.

The church is finalizing a five-year development plan for which it will seek aid from international church agencies through the World Council of Churches.

During the food crisis the committee gave $500,000 to food distribution centers and $100,000 for trucks to transport relief supplies. Now it has contributed $15,000 to each of three Ethiopian Church nurseries.

Ad additional $1 million has been committed for long-range rehabilitation and development projects. "I hope the Ethiopian Church will send these so our directors can consider them at our October meeting," Ms. Kehrberg said.

More sadness Mrs. Wilmore

Mrs. Henrietta Ella Wilmore, 66, was eulogized on August 9, at Centennial-Caroline St. Methodist Church, where she was an active member and sang on the choir.

Unique was the obituary in her own words. Excerpts:

"I enjoyed this life that was given to me, but my pride and joy were my five children, Josephine Ridgley, my devoted eldest daughter, was my daughter and my best friend. Next was Barry, my son, who in his own way loved me very much.

"Kathy Fitzgerald came next and she and I spent many hours just talking and laughing with each other. Sam my younger son, was a handsome guy with whom I could share many things.

"Carla, my youngest child, was a source of pride and joy.

"Yes, I was a doting grandmother to Debbie, Tesa, Anton, Craig, Cherise, Tyron, Anita, Charles, Jr. (Seddy) and Charles Samuel (Monk)! My great grandchildren, Darius, Dontae and Davonne were very precious to me, and I was eagerly awaiting another.

"My sons-in-law, Tommy and Paul lost their identity as in-laws and became sons. My daughter-in-law, Bernice became my daughter.

My mother, Emily Brumwell, who is eighty-seven years old, also survives me. Charles Watts has been my constant companion. Other realtives and friends and especially my Elk family will be missed."

Lou Williams

Louis Williams, Jr., 63, was given last rites on August 11, at Lyeth Funeral Home. He was a World War 2 vet who served in the Navy, and for over 40 years was employed as a painter at Bethlehem Steel.

Kin gather

When retired Lt. Col. Lester Franklyn Russell was buried here last month, kin came from far and near to memorialize their beloved "Frank."

His wife, Mamie Hubert Russell, was greatly comforted by their presence, since the Russells had been residents of Baltimore only three years, following his retirement as instructor of Georgian Court College in N.J.

Kin here: George Russell, San Diego assistant superintendent of schools; daughter, Diane, the Hyattsville physical therapist; sister, Mrs. Roberta Russell, the retired N.Y. educator.

Also brothers, Dr. Bruce Russell, the Baltimore orthopedic surgeon; Rev. George Russell, retired Baptist minister here; Dr. Roger D. Russell, retired-Nassau, L.I. educator; and Rev. Dr. Wendell Russell, former president of the D.C. City College, now minister of a Baptist Church in Marlboro, Md.

Nice gesture: A bus load of church members came from his church to join the family at funeral services at Gospel Tabernacle Baptist Church.

Also surviving, aunts, Mrs. Bessie Cornelius, Silver Spring; and Mrs. Belle Jour Johnson, D.C.

Cuff note: Gospel Tabernacle Baptist Church pastor, Rev. Edgar L. Reid, is an eloquent speaker . . . his words of comfort for his longtime friend. Gospel Tabernacle is a beautiful place to worship.

Len Bias' parents and coaches appear Wed. at secret inquest

UPPER MARLBORO, MD. (UPI) — A grand jury investigating the cocaine-related death of Len Bias convened for the fourth day this week after hearing testimony from the University of Maryland basketball star's parents and a host of former and present officials familiar with the school's athletic program.

James and Lonise Bias entered the closed-door session at about 1 p.m. Wednesday and left court shortly before 4 p.m. without speaking to reporters.

"They did make a presentation to the grand jury," their attorney Wayne Curry told reporters afterwards, adding that the Biases have "faith in the ongoing investigation that all facts about Len's death will be disclosed."

The Biases refused to criticize the process that has kept their son's June 19 death in the public eye, Curry said.

"They wanted to know basically what happened to their son," juror Tom Madison said. "There wasn't much we could tell them. They were afraid that things coming out were not true."

Also appearing Wednesday were Mel Cartwright, an assistant coach who retired 1½ years ago, and Terrapins assistant basketball coaches Oliver Purnell and Ron Bradley, both of whom were at court for the second straight day.

The grand jury, after indicting three people on drug charges in its initial phase last month, is focusing on drug use among university athletes and allegations that head coach Charles "Lefty" Driesell may have told his players not to cooperate fully with authorities at some point after Bias's death.

The second round of the secret inquiry began Monday.

Jeff Hathaway, business manager for the Maryland athletic department, and Tim Burton, the basketball team manager, also appeared at the secret session Wednesday.

None of those appearing before the grand jury would comment to reporters.

The first phase of the inquiry centered on immediate events leading to Bias's collapse and subsequent death from cocaine intoxication in his college dormitory suite.

Three people were indicted from the first phase, including two of Bias's teammates who were kicked off the team indefinitely.

The players, Terry Long and David Gregg, who were also Bias's roommates, were indicted on charges of possessing cocaine and of obstruction of justice for allegedly clearing evidence from the room where Bias collapsed.

Bias's friend, Brian Tribble, is accused of supplying the cocaine that led to the All-America player's death.

It was believed that Cartwright coached Tribble when he was a junior varsity basketball player at the university, but it was not clear Wednesday whether that relationship had anything to do with Cartwright's being called to the hearing.

Driesell, who may be called to testify Friday, is a key figure in this stage of the inquiry, along with Athletic Director Dick Dull and Robert Wagner, Bias's high school coach.

Wagner has been targeted in light of allegations that he told players to clear Bias's room of evidence, State's Attorney Arthur Marshall said on Tuesday.

In a related matter, university Chancellor John Slaughter on Wednesday announced "emergency changes" in the operation of the Maryland's basketball program for this fall.
