Substance abuse probed

By Alicia Benjamin
AFRO Staff Writer

Substance abuse usually occurs during leisure time when many could be exercising or participating in other recreational activities.

A group of park and recreation authorities and others convened at the Lord Baltimore Hotel last week to discuss how parks and recreation departments could help prevent diseases and divert substance abusers from drugs and alcohol.

The Roundtable Associates, a group of park and recreation employees, health authorities, city, state and federal employees met for two days to share their views and knowledge about ways to incorporate constructive recreational activities into health prevention programs.

Roundtable chairman, Samuel LaBeach said that all Americans are being threatened by the escalation of disease and drug abuse but blacks are at greater risk, he said.

Recreational services has the potential to "creatively contribute to the prevention of disease and the maintenane of health and wellness," said LaBeach.

The Roundtable, a non-profit organization, was founded to ensure that park, recreation and conservation public policy formulation and decision making includes the best interests of blacks.

Over 300 people attended the conference which included opening remarks by Mayor Kurt L. Schmoke.

Dr. Jessyna McDonald, post-doctoral fellow with the Midwest Council on Social Research and Aging, presented her paper on research perspectives in Advancing the health and wellness of African Americans to the audience.

Secretary of Education, William Bennet concluded that the U.S. is a nation at risk but blacks have become a race at risk, said McDonald.

She stated that blacks are three times more likely to live in poverty as whites and twice as likely to be unemployed.

Homicide is the leading cause of death among black men, she also said.

But perhaps the most critical health and social problem among black people is substance abuse, she stated.

Dr. Willi Daniels, Coordinator of Recreation Careers Program and Associate professor of Education at Grambling University, also presented a paper on administrative program perspectives in advancing the health of blacks.

Daniels found that blacks do not participate in cer-

Remarks on Indians

than assimilating into the mainstream of American life.

"We have not been humored by the federal government into remaining in our own so-called primitive lifestyle," he said. "President Reagan has the funny idea that poverty is part of the Navajo culture.

"That confusion is no joke to us because every day we are waging our own battle to conquer poverty on our land."

He also questioned Reagan's suggestion that the government had "Provided" the Indians with millions of acres of land.

"We were never 'given' land by the federal government," he said. "Our Land belonged to us for centuries, and treaties between the federal government and our tribes establish our undisputed right to those lands, our homelands."

MacDonald expressed bemusement over Reagan's statement that many Indians had become rich because their reservations overlay "great pools of oil."

"Maybe some on-site inspection of our reservation is needed to see that Navajos, while we may have energy resources in our lands, we are hardly oil-pumping barons," he said with a smile.

"Yes, we have income generated by those resources, but when you have a per capita annual income of $2,400 and an unemployment rate of 40 percent, you are talking about poverty.

Substance abuse probed

tain recreational activities such as distance running events, ballroom dancing, pottery clubs and other areas.

"We don't like to participate in the things we don't know much about," he said.

He said park and recreation departments must attract more blacks to their programs and offer activities that excite them, if parks and recreation services are to play a role in contributing to the health and wellness of blacks.

Dr. Earl Richardson, President of Morgan State University, told the audience that as a black university, Morgan can act as an educational resource for the community and for students and inform them of the kinds of services available through park and recreational services.

Richardson also said that the school could conduct research to find out the needs of the black community in terms of services offered by the parks and recreation department.
