gavel...when it convenes until it ends," said Bill Zervas, manager of media services for the Mayor's Office of Cable and Communications, which will bring the meetings in to cable subscribers' homes.

The councilmembers had a "dry-run," that's TV jargon for rehearsal, Oct. 24 to familiarize themselves with cameras in the Council Chambers said Zervas.

The Baltimore City Council meets to review and pass laws that concern Baltimoreans on the fourth floor of City Hall.

The Mayor's Office of Cable and Communications, which produces public service announcements and audio and video tapes for city agencies, will cover the meetings with three cameramen, two production workers and a production van Zervas said.

Most of the council favor the tapings, but some still have reservations.

"I have mixed feelings about it," said Vera Hall, Fifth District.

"I think the public would be better served if the (council) hearings were taped instead, because what the public sees in the Council is usually the end result of the hearings," said Hall.

Educational, housing and financial matters involving the city are some of the public hearings the Council schedules.

Martin E. "Mike" Curran, the chairman of the policy and planning committee which held one hearing to hear testimony on the council meeting tapings, said Tuesday he favors the live tapings.

"It's a good opportunity for people to see their city council people in action or inaction, whatever the case may be," said Curran.

The Third District councilman said the mayor gave his approval in the summer.

Zervas said hearings will be aired, but the Council would have to select which hearings will be aired. There is also a possibility of a show spotlighting Mayor Kurt L. Schmoke.

Hall said she was concerned about the temptation of councilmembers upstaging one another on television by speaking excessively in to the camera.

"I'd hate to see it (the council meeting) turn into a long drawn out meeting, because we love to talk to each other and talk about issues," said Hall.

Bill Driscoll, a legislative policy analyst for the council, said in other cities where city council meetings are broadcast the lawmakers initially tended to be wordy, but after legislators adapted to the cameras, the meetings' length shortened.

The policy analyst said Baltimore will have an advantage over most cities that tape council hearings, because Cable 44 will use three cameras providing viewers with a wide range of shots. One camera is the norm Driscoll said.

The production crew will not have to rearrange lighting because the City Council chambers are equipped with adequate lighting Driscoll said.

United Cable, which is installing the city's 60-channel-capable cable system, has granted the city $1.1 million for the development of the Mayor's Office of Cable and Communications' projects said Gary MacGregor, director of marketing for United Cable.

United Cable set aside channel 44 for the agency MacGregor said.

Fifty-five percent of the city has been wired and the rest is expected to be completed by September 1989 said MacGregor.

Currently, 120,000 homes have been wired but only 40,000 families have subscribed said Driscoll.

MacGregor said the Northeast and West sections of the city have been wired, but the southeast still waits for wiring.

MacGregor said there are still "sprinkles of pockets" in the city, particularly apartment complexes, that have not been wired yet.

United Cable has to obtain a right of entry from the complex owners in order to begin wiring said MacGregor.

Come Monday, Baltimore will join Cambridge, Mass. and Newark, N.J. and other metropolitan cities that broadcast their council meetings.

"This is bringing city government to the people," said Driscoll.

In Baltimore County, the Baltimore County Council meetings have been aired for about four or five years at 9 p.m. on Comcast Cable Television's Channel 10, said Thomas Toporovich, secretary for the Baltimore County Council.

"I think it's definitely a plus in the right direction," said Councilman Nicholas C. D'Adamo, Jr. about the taping of the city council meetings. He serves the First District.

D'Adamo said many elderly people and shut-ins who can not find a way to attend the city council meetings because of a lack of transportation or downtown parking can now stay at home and watch the council.

"It's an opportunity for them to turn on the tv and watch it (the council meetings) or turn the tube off," D'Adamo said Oct. 31.

Zervas said the three cameras will transfer video signals from the City Council chambers to the production van outside City Hall. The signal will then be sent to the $460,000 cable and communications studio on East Fayette Street and then microwaved two miles to United Cable's headquarters on Kirk Avenue and then sent out to the subscriber.

Zervas said the system is a combination of videos and character generators (keyboards).

Most of the councilmembers said the presence of cameras would not alter their behaviors. Councilman Curran said the cameras would not influence the way the lawmakers voted on a bill either.

Zervas said production for the Council tapings will cost about $200 per hour. The cost is about half to one-third less than hiring an outside production agency.

"This is a first-hand chance for citizens to see the city government process," said Joyce Jefferson Daniels, director of the Mayor's Office of Cable and Communications. She is former City Hall reporter for WMAR-TV 2 news.

Driscoll said in the past, usually 100 people would attend a Council meeting on a good night. Now with television, he expects at least 4,000 or one percent of the city's cable subscribers to tune in to Channel 44 to watch their councilmen and councilwoman.

In Cambridge, the Council meetings were one of the most popular programs on the government-access channel said Driscoll.

Jefferson-Daniels said the viewership depends upon the issues. If the council is discussing a controversial issue then the viewership probably will be high.

Cable 44, a 24-hour station, airs a Baltimore history program called, "It's Baltimore," a story-telling program called "Once Upon A Time," in conjunction with the Enoch Pratt Free Library for children and video bulletin boards to inform citizens with city government news.

The Mayor's Office on Cable and Communications this summer produced a series of teenage pregnancy public service announcements for the Baltimore Health Department featuring "The Cosby Show's" Malcolm Jamal Warner, "The Facts of Life's" Kim Fields and "Growing Pains'" Tracie Gold.

The communications agency evolved from the Office of Telecommunications in 1985. Cable 44 aired in July 1986 Zervas said.

Post offices closed for Veterans Day

All post offices, stations and branches will be closed on Friday, November 11, 1988 in observance of the Veterans Day Holiday, Baltimore Division General Manager/Postmaster James A. McDougald announced.

There will be no window service. Post Office box service will be provided on a holiday schedule.

Delivery services will be limited to Express Mail and Special Delivery at offices having receipt of mail.

One collection will be made from collection boxes located in front of main offices, stations and branches, self-service postal centers and in designated business and residential areas.

Customers may purchase stamps from Self-Service Postal Centers which are opened 24-hours daily.
